University of Illinois at Chicago Department of Political Science December 27, 2006 In our earlier study of the Chicago City Council, from May 7, 2003 until December 7, 2005, we highlighted the Council's newly found independence. In this last year, from December 15, 2005 to November 15, 2006, there has been increasing independence in city council voting. During the last eleven months there have been 20 divided role call votes, approximately two per month. The average aldermanic support for the mayor on these key divided votes has decreased slightly from 84% to 83%. More importantly, the mayor lost the "Foie Gras Ban" and the more critical "Big Box" ordinance, which for the first time since he was elected in 1989, forced him to use his mayoral veto. His father, Richard J. Daley, did not have to use the mayoral veto during his 22 years in office. On the other hand, Mayor Harold Washington used his veto powers frequently during his first four-year term.

This Mayor Daley's near total control of the previously rubber stamp city council has been weakened by the continuing patronage and corruption scandals. He has faced growing opposition at the grassroots, including labor unions, community groups, and organizing in the minority communities by previous and current mayoral candidates Jesse Jackson Jr., Luis Gutierrez, Dorothy Brown, and Bill "Dock" Walls.

Five major issues have dominated the city council in the last year: (1) foie gras ban in restaurants, (2) aldermanic pay, (3) minimum wage requirements for large retailers ("Big Box Ordinance"), (4) a requirement for hotels to inform guests of a hotel workers' strike, and (5) the downtown parking garage deal. Unlike the voting records from the first report of 29 divided roll call votes from 2003-2005, in which three aldermen voted in favor of the mayor's position on issues 100% of the time, not a single alderman has done so in 2006. These three pro-Daley aldermen, with the new votes factored into their averages, had the following new percentages of agreement with the mayor on divided and controversial votes. James Balcer, from the mayor's 11th ward supported him 96% of the time; Ed Burke (14th), the mayor's official floor leader was almost as loyal voting with the mayor 93%; and Theodore Matlak, from Congressman Rostenkowski's 32nd ward, dropped to 87% support.

On April 26, 2006, the Council blatantly defied the mayor's wishes by voting unanimously against his position on the serving of foie gras, an expensive form of goose or duck liver, in city restaurants. Because geese and ducks are allegedly force-fed to fatten their livers, animal rights activists had lobbied to ban the delicacy. In defense of the ban, Alderman Joe Moore (49th) stated that, ""It's not going to cost the taxpayers a single nickel. It's not taking away any funds from any other city services or human service programs. It's simply outlawing the product of a cruel and inhumane practice."

Mayor Daley was vocal in his opposition to such a ban, and reacted saying, "We have children getting killed by gang leaders and dope dealers. We have real issues here in this city. And we're dealing with foie gras? Let's get some priorities."

Considering that only a small number of restaurants actually served foie gras in Chicago, the ban is not economically substantive. However, following the symbolic defiance of the mayor's wishes on foie gras, there was an increase in dissenting votes on other matters.

The most substantive contentious issue the council faced in 2006 was the fight over minimum wage requirements for large retail chains, such as Wal-Mart and Target.

This had followed previous council fights over opening new Wal-Mart stores in the city.

The proposed ordinance, strongly supported by unions and community organizations, required "Big Box" retailers to pay a minimum of $10 per hour and to provide $3 per hour in medical benefits by the year 2010. Labor unions strongly supported the ordinance, while the mayor opposed it because the retailers threatened to abandon Chicago. The debate on the issue was heated and centered on whether the ordinance would help the poor by providing bigger paychecks or hurt them by reducing job opportunities in the city. Alderman Joe Moore (49th) argued, "In urging passage of [the original minimum wage] legislation, FDR declared, 'No business which depends for existence on paying less than living wages to its workers has any right to continue in this country.'"<sup>3</sup> Alderman Bernard Stone (50th), disagreed with Moore's comparison to President Franklin Roosevelt and claimed, "My colleague is Robin Hood. What he wants to do is steal from the rich and give to the poor."<sup>4</sup>

On July 26, following the exceedingly rare six and a half hour debate, the council defied Mayor Daley by passing the ordinance with a seemingly veto-proof majority of 35-14. Mayor Daley dismissed speculation about how he may be losing his clout. Referring to the Aldermen that had supported the ordinance, he claimed, "They're afraid of candidates running against them. That's what it is. That was the real issue." When asked directly at a press conference if he indeed was losing his influence over the council, Daley replied flatly, "No, I don't think so. People have their own minds." Not only was the mayor defeated in the vote, but his alternative bill to allow ward-by-ward decisions over "living wage" pay was not even considered a possibility.

Despite the veto-proof majority of the original vote, Mayor Daley used his veto for the first time in his five terms of office. Then he persuaded Aldermen Danny Solis (25th), Shirley Coleman (16th), and George Cardenas (12th) to switch their votes from support of the ordinance to opposition. Helen Shiller (46th) also opposed the ordinance, although she had not voted in July. On September 13, the council attempted to override the veto and voted 31 – 18, but was three votes short of the necessary 34 votes. When commenting on his legislative victory, Mayor Daley gave support to a statewide living wage law, which later passed the state legislature. He said, "Today the City Council, after sincere debate, affirmed our commitment to create new jobs and business in Chicago, especially in those communities that most need them. Now it is time to come together to increase wages for all."

Although the mayor stopped the "Big Box" ordinance in 2006, proponents of the measure were far from conceding defeat on the issue. Alderman Freddrenna Lyle (6th) said, "It is not a defeat . . . The mayor won the battle today, but we are going to win the war." <sup>8</sup> Indeed, defiant members of the Council vowed to return the issue to a vote with an even more encompassing bill. The defeated bill would have applied to all businesses in Chicago that had over $1 billion in revenue and over 90,000 square feet of floor space. Labor leaders and their Council allies promised to revisit the issue in February 2007, this time proposing a bill that would require compliance among any business with over 1,000 employees. The head of the Chicago Federation of Labor, Dennis Gannon, said, "This issue is not going away. We are going to address it somehow. If it is in the City Council, fine. If it is in Springfield, fine. This battle isn't over because the mayor decided to veto something." The unions also promised to target the mayor and his supporting aldermen in the 2007 elections, using the "Big Box" issue to paint their opponents as being insensitive to working families.

With all the attention in the July 26, 2006 city council session being focused on the "Big Box" issue, there was relatively little debate over aldermanic pay increases.

Aldermen voted 27-16 to give themselves a pay raise. Fearing political backlash for the pay raise, many Aldermen chose to vote "no" on the raise when they were sure that the measure had the needed 26 votes to pass. Among these were Manny Flores (1st), Madeline Haithcock (2nd), Ginger Rugai (19th), Arenda Troutman (20th), Ariel Reboyras (30th), Richard Mell (33rd), William Banks (36th), Vi Daley (43rd), Tom Tunney (44th), Danny Solis (25th), Ray Suarez (31st), George Cardenas (12th), Emma Mitts (37th), Tom Allen (38th), Marge Laurino (39th) and Helen Shiller (46th). The measure was sponsored by Alderman Bernard Stone (50th), who refused the last pay raise, and goaded the novoting aldermen by saying, "For four years, I have returned $10,000. Now, all of you who voted 'no' will do the same." The current aldermanic salary is $98,125, but the new schedule will raise their pay in incremental amounts on an annual basis to compensate for inflation. Mayor Daley supported the pay raise, but with elections looming on the horizon, dissenting aldermen were influenced more by the opinions of their constituents.

The July 26th session saw further dissent over the issue of unionized hotel workers. In 2003, Chicago hotel workers walked out over contract negotiations. By the summer of 2006, management and labor had made little progress over contract disputes, and a strike loomed on the horizon. Mayor Daley supported requiring hotels to notify guests if their workers went on strike, but the ordinance failed with 21 yeas and 27 nays.

The Millennium and Grant Park parking garages were at the center of what Alderman Dorothy Tillman (3rd) called a "piece of Jim Crow," referring to the segregation laws of the South prior to the Civil Rights Movement. The Council voted 37-8 to approve a deal to privatize the parking garages and hand their operations over to Morgan Stanley Investment Management. The seven aldermen who joined Tillman in opposing the plan were Toni Preckwinkle (4th), Leslie Hairston (5th), Theodore Thomas (15th), Shirley Coleman (16th), Howard Brookins Jr. (21st), Michael Chandler (24th), and Ed Smith (28th). Aldermen Todd Stroger (8th) and Arenda Troutman (20th) did not vote. Alderman Tillman slammed the measure claiming that Morgan Stanley lied about their past involvement with slavery. She declared, "J.P. Morgan would be nothing if it was not for black folks. And they're going to come here and pee in our face and tell us it's raining? . . . Now, they got on suits and they think they can still step on black folks 400 years later -- and I say no." She has been a vocal proponent of reparations.

One of the consistent fault lines in the Daley Rubber Stamp Council has been racial issues. Going back to the remap of the wards in 1991 and even the "Council Wars" of the 1980s, the city council is often split along racial lines and minority aldermen are willing to vote in opposition to the mayor when an issue is cast in racial terms.

Unlike last year, the 2007 budget vote this November was passed unanimously. Mayor Daley prepared for a run at his sixth term in office by proposing a budget that included no new taxes and no tax increases. In fact, it was able to include money for social programs, like more affordable housing and neighborhood improvements, but only from one-time revenues like the sale of the Skyway and the Millennium Park parking garages along with over $100 million in infrastructure bonds to be paid off in future decades. Nonetheless, the combination of no raise in the property tax and money for social programs and neighborhood improvements got aldermanic support this election year.

However, the unanimous budget vote did not stop some aldermen from using debate time to also gear up for the 2007 elections. Aldermen Ed Smith (28th), Toni

Preckwinkle (4th), and Arenda Troutman (20th) pounced on the issue of corruption at City Hall. Smith quipped, "I want to make it perfectly clear that there is no heading in the budget that reads, "The Department of Criminal Affairs." Troutman chimed in saying

"The Duffs stole $100 million earmarked for blacks and other minorities. . . . White men

[used] their mothers, sisters and daughters to steal $40 million. They abused the Hired

Truck Program designed to help blacks and other minorities pull themselves up by their bootstraps. These people were getting contracts because they lived in a white city." The mayor responded saying to reporters, "Everybody's against corruption, whether it's an employee, the president of a company, the chairman of the board, anyone.

Everybody's against any type of corruption. Of course, I am, too." 14

Rubber Stamp Control is Weakening

Mayor Richard M. Daley was first elected in 1989 to complete Mayor Washington's term in office after Eugene Sawyer served from 1987 – 1989. In the beginning, he had majority support from the city council, but not rubber stamp control. In his first year in office (April 1989 – March 1990) there were 99 divided roll call votes, twice more than the number of divided votes over the last 3 ½ years of his current term. Only his two floor leaders voted with him 100% on these early key votes. At the same time, 13 aldermen opposed him on more than 50% of the time. His legislative program was saved by the additional 26 aldermen who gave him more than 90% support. His average support in the first year, however, remained at 75%.

By 1993-1994 the number of divided roll call votes had decreased to 71, and an amazing change occurred. Thirteen aldermen now supported him 100% of the time, no alderman failed to provide support for the mayor less than 50%, and the total number of aldermen supporting him at least 90% of the time grew to 30, over 60% of the council during his second term. The weaker hold which he had in his first year in office had changed to near absolute control over the council. On average, aldermen voted with him, even on controversial votes, 86% of the time. He lost no votes and did not need his veto.

While Mayor Daley began his current term in office in a dominant position with scattered and diverse opposition, he has been weakened by scandals of corruption and patronage in the last several years, and his grip has consequently weakened. Since the first council meeting on May 7, 2003, there have been 49 divided roll call votes. No alderman, not even his floor leaders, has supported him on every controversial vote. He has lost at least four of these votes and had to use his veto for the first time since he became mayor to prevail on the "Big Box" ordinance. Despite this, he still receives 83% support on average. There are really only three aldermen who opposed him consistently: Alderman Tillman (3rd), Alderman Preckwinkle (4th), and Alderman Troutman (20th). Even they supported him from 50-70% of the time. At the other end of the spectrum, only seven aldermen now support him at least 90% of the time.

It is impossible to predict, even if Mayor Daley wins reelection, if the city council will remain a rubber stamp. The upcoming aldermanic elections will determine that.

Voters will direct the future of the city council, which is how it should be in a democracy.

As of this writing, we know this much. This has been one of the largest groups of aldermanic challengers ever to file to run for office. As of the end of filing, on December 18, 2006, 259 candidates filed petitions. If most of them remain on the ballot, there will be contested elections in 47 of the 50 wards.

Mayor Daley filed fewer than 25,000 petition signatures, which would be too few even to get him on the ballot in previous elections. His patronage army has been seriously weakened by the continuing corruption and patronage court cases and an official court-appointed monitor is to prevent future patronage hiring at city hall. In addition, community organizations, labor unions, and future mayoral candidates are supporting anti-Daley, anti-Rubber Stamp, aldermen. They may not succeed in many races, but if they can elect as many as 10 of the 50 aldermen, the balance of power in the council would tip and a stronger, more unified opposition bloc should emerge.

Independence in aldermanic voting and the introduction of legislation has clearly increased since 2003. But the elections will determine whether this continues or the city council lapses back into the rubber stamp mold.
