Since she overwhelmingly won her reelection in November, 2014 with 53% of the vote in the primary and 78% in the general election, Cook County President Toni Preckwinkle has achieved a number of policy goals, including lowering health care costs and decreasing the number of inmates in the jail. Because of ever increasing costs of government and the county's major pension debts, Preckwinkle, after rolling back 1% in the sales tax in her first term, had to raise it back to its previous level. She has also spent much of her second term cutting spending as well as increasing taxes. This was particularly the case after the "soda tax" on sweetened beverages was repealed, leaving a $200 million gap in the county's 2018 budget.

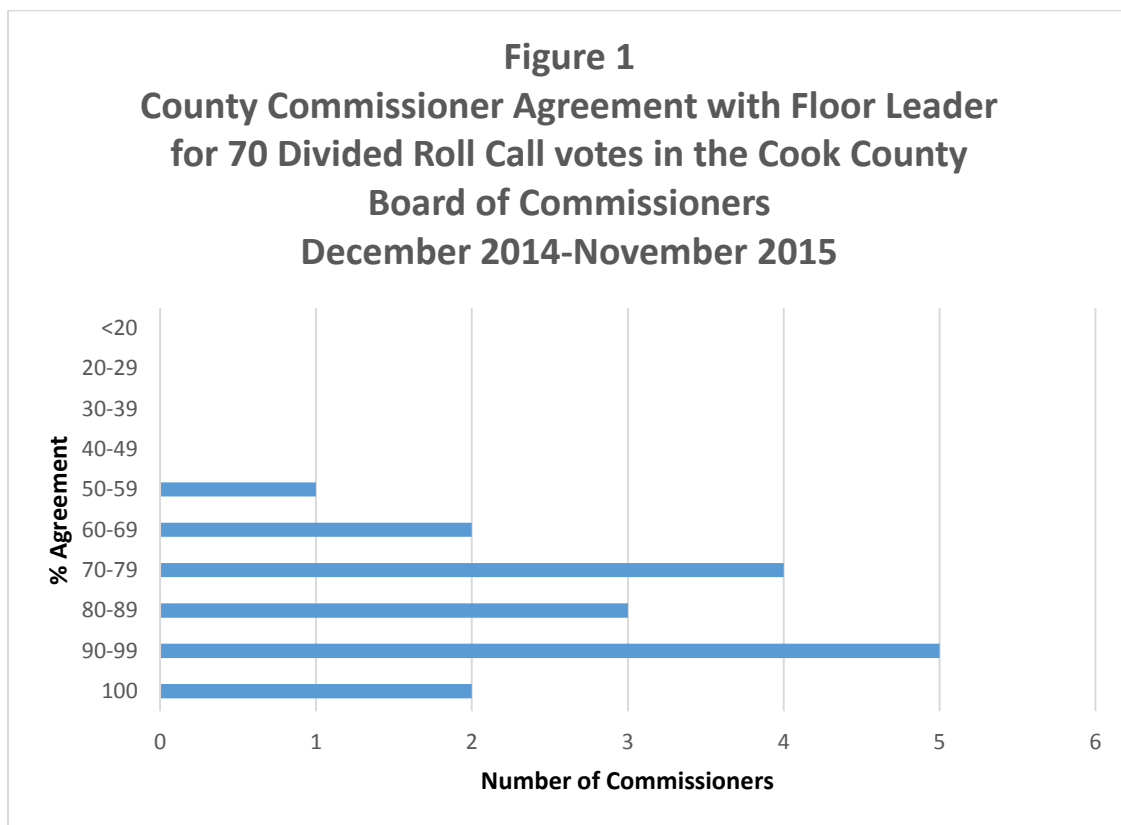

On the positive side of the ledger, Preckwinkle and the Board of Commissioners have reduced the county's debt by 11%, worked to increase funding by federal and state government for health care by enrolling patients into Obamacare, and decreased the daily jail population by approximately 3,800 inmates. Most controversially, however, she originally passed the "soda tax" only to see it later repealed. This caused the layoff of county employees and painful cuts in county government's services.

Because of her mandate from the 2014 election, President Preckwinkle was able to get most of her legislation approved by the county board. She has won all but two votes to come before the board. The major exceptions were the repeal of the "soda tax" and a resolution on Chicago Police "stop and frisk" procedures.

Though the percentage of divided votes among the Cook County Board of Commissioners was only a small percentage of all votes from December 2014 to the present, at least one or more members of the Board dissented on 140 votes. This report provides an analysis of those votes, the way different members voted, how often they agreed or disagreed with President Preckwinkle's floor leader, Commissioner Jesus "Chuy" Garcia (D-Chicago), and the effect of partisanship on some votes. Because Commissioner Garcia’s vote in nearly every case represented the Preckwinkle administration and Preckwinkle herself only voted on tie votes, we used Garcia’s vote as the measure of the administration’s position. Very few divided votes had five or more members in opposition. A handful of those deemed most critical or most divided, are studied in more detail in this report.

This report seeks to provide voters with an analysis of their representatives’ voting histories so they may decide how well their representatives are addressing their concerns, and consequently, citizens can better hold their representatives accountable for their actions.

The current Cook County Board of Commissioners and its President were elected in November of 2014. They took office in December and immediately began the work of county government.

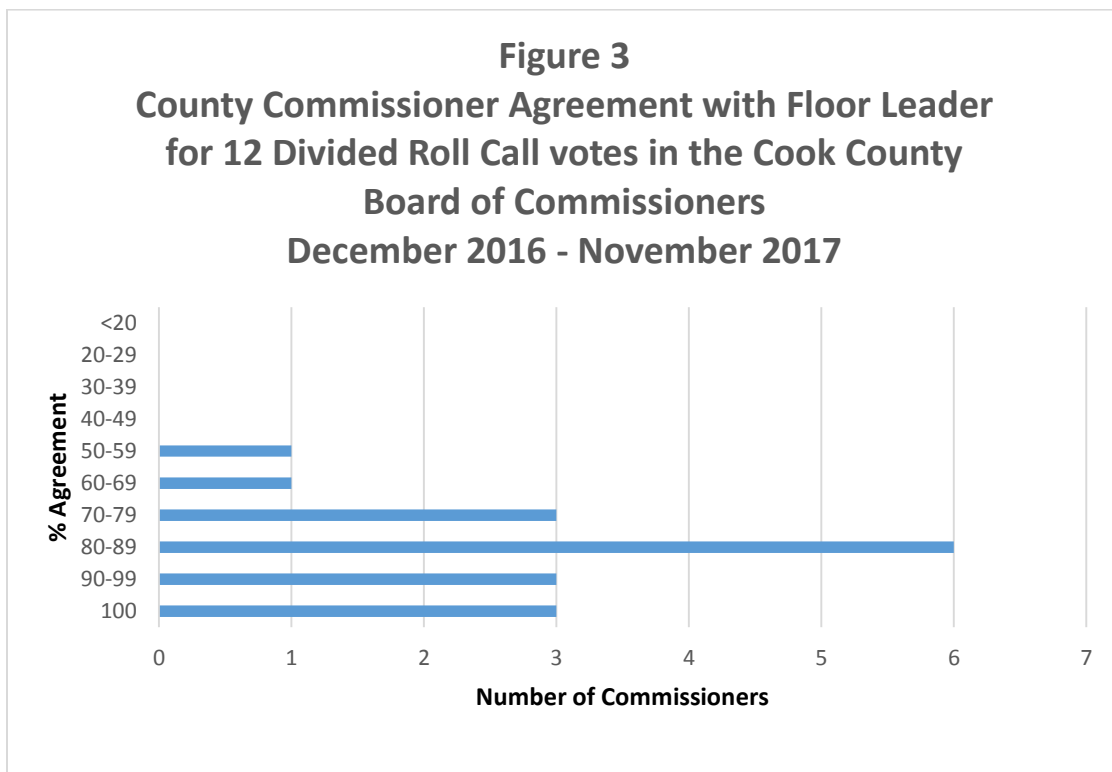

The first task was to organize the newly elected board and to select the President Pro Tem, chairpersons, and committee members. This was done with only one dissenting vote, that of Commissioner John Fritchey (D-Chicago). Still as Figure 1 shows, there were 70 separate divided roll call votes from December 2014 – November 2015, most of them around the issue of taxes which would be a continuing theme. 2014-2015, was the most contentious year of their current term with a number of commissioners dissenting on various policies.

This term differed from President Preckwinle’s first term in office from 2010-2013 when there were only 42 divided roll call votes over three years rather than the 70 divided votes in the first year of this term.

In 2015-2016, as Figure 2 shows, the number of divided roll call votes actually declined to 58 with only one commissioner dissenting on nearly all of those votes and the rest supporting the County Board President and her floor leader on average more than 80% of the time.

In 2017 there were significantly fewer divided roll call votes but the problem of funding county government became much more intense. The “soda tax” was enacted with great controversy with a nearly evenly divided vote only to be reversed when the protests by the soda industry, grocery stores, and consumers became too great at the end of the year. The repeal of the "soda tax" left a $200 million gap in the county budget which could be managed only with controversial budget cuts and job layoffs.

As can be seen from Table 1, commissioners differed significantly in their support of President Preckwinkle’s stated positions over the last three years and from the votes of her floor leader, Commissioner Garcia. For instance, Commissioner Timothy Schneider (R- Bartlett) supported the administration only 50% of the time on divided roll call votes while most Democrats supported her more than 90% of the time. The Democrats with the least support were Commissioner John Fritchey (D-Chicago) with 76% support and Richard Boykin (D-Chicago) and Larry Suffredin (D-Evanston) each of whom provided 81% support. We explore the specific reasons for these different voting patterns in our account of key issues.

Overall Voting Pattern

There have been many more divided roll call votes on the Cook County Board than in the Chicago City Council. For instance, From June 2015-April 2016 there were only 32 divided roll call votes in the city council and Mayor Emanuel lost no votes. One reason for the greater division in the county than the city is that the county board differs from the city council in having four Republican members while the city council has none. Four, or 24% of the 17 Cook County Commissioners, are Republican and they form an opposition bloc, particularly on budgeting and tax issues. While some Democrats opposed President Preckwinkle on some votes, the Republicans alone voted unanimously against the Presidents' budget recommendation for 2017; against the increase in the amusement tax in 2015, and against the resolution for the "dignified treatment of Central-American asylum seekers." All four Republicans voted in opposition together some 15 times over the three year period studied.

It is these budget and tax issues that have led to the most numerous and closest divided roll call votes. During the past three years, the President and the board have dealt with increases in the cost of government and a large and persistent pension debt. Therefore, board members have clashed over legislation to raise taxes and fees, and to make additional cuts in government services.

While the county government under President Preckwinkle has reduced its health care costs by aggressively pursuing Obamacare payments for patients, and has lowered the jail population and the cost to house and guard inmates, the President and the board still had to raise taxes. That caused the greatest division on the Board of Commissioners and among the general public.

Among all the issues which the board has decided over the last three years, the following are the most controversial issues, as determined by the number of opposing votes:

2016 Countywide Referendum Abolishing the Office of the Cook County Recorder of Deeds

Both the offices of Cook County Recorder of Deeds and the Cook County Clerk are tasked with recording and maintaining official records. In an effort to consolidate government offices, eliminate operational redundancies, and improve efficiency, the Cook County Board voted to add a binding countywide referendum to the November 8, 2016 ballot. The referendum allowed voters to decide if the two offices should be consolidated. This is the first time since 1972 that voters were given the decision of eliminating a government office and thus, downsizing Cook County government.¹

Proponents argued that this would allow taxpayers the opportunity to make a decision about how county government should be structured. Additionally, they estimated that combining the two offices would reduce government costs by $800,000 annually. Opponents felt strongly that the merger was a racial attack against black elected officials by eliminating an office then held by Recorder Karen Yarbrough, an African-American. Yarbrough claimed that she did not believe that this merger would save the money it intended and she argued that the merger itself was risky.²

Despite the controversy, on June 29, 2016, the Board of Commissioners voted 10-5 to add the referendum to the November 2016 election ballot and allow voters to decide whether the offices would merge by the end of 2020 or remain as they were.³ The referendum passed and the Office of Recorder will be merged with the County Clerk's office.

Sweetened Beverage Tax

According to county officials, the main purpose of the sweetened beverage tax (often called the “Soda Tax”) was to protect public health. Three major health organizations, the HHS, USDA, and WHO, concur that consuming too much sugar can lead to health issues like obesity and diabetes. As a result, the Board of Commissioners, with a very close 9-8 vote on November 10, 2016, approved the sweetened beverage tax in Cook County. Because the original vote of the commissioners was an 8-8 tie, County President Toni Preckwinkle was called upon to break the tie. Preckwinkle, while acknowledging the potential health benefits, also supported the tax because it was expected to bring in at least an additional $75 million of revenue annually.⁴

However, many commissioners, businesses, and citizens opposed the tax. All four Republicans on the Board along with four Democrat commissioners spoke and voted against the tax. The American Beverage Association was among several interest groups that spoke against it. Some people in the opposition believed the tax was regressive and would hurt the working class.⁵ Claudia Rodriguez, the spokesperson for the Cook County Coalition Against Beverage Taxes, claimed that the "Soda Tax" would result in “fewer jobs, lower incomes, and higher grocery bills.”⁶

The "Soda Tax" became effective on August 2, 2017, but within three months, twelve of the seventeen commissioners voted to repeal the tax and made the repeal effective on December 1, 2017, the start of the county’s new budget year.⁷ One of the commissioners who changed his vote on the tax was Chuy Garcia. During a speech to University of Illinois at Chicago students on November 1, 2017, he explained his change of heart: “the tax was burdensome, more so than I thought initially. What began to convince me that it was too high was when I began to have conversations with ‘ma and pa’ stores. They were really afraid that people would not patronize their stores because they didn't want to pay the tax....It wasn't until the 'ma and pa' store conversations that I became an advocate for the repeal.”

ACLU Recommendations on “Stop and Frisk” Police Practices

During the summer of 2014, the Chicago police made more than a quarter million stops, topping the number of New York Police stops made during the height of the stop and frisk policy era in that much larger city. Of these 250,000 stops, many of which were made as stop and frisks, no one was arrested. This caused the ACLU to claim that these stops seemed to be racially motivated. While the African American population only makes up 32% of the total Chicago population, they were subjected to 72% of the stops. Latinos make up 29% of the Chicago population but experienced 17% of the stops while whites make up 32% of the population in Chicago but accounted for 9% of the stops.⁸

As a result of what the ACLU of Illinois claimed to be a racially motivated policing, the non-profit organization released a report recommending changes in procedure for the Chicago Police.⁹ The ACLU's report found that not only are officers pressured to make stops to document evidence of police activity, but also about half of the 250 “sample contact cards” which police are required to fill out for each stop and that the ACLU reviewed, showed no lawful reason why a stop occurred.¹⁰ The ACLU recommended additional training for all officers and supervisors on legal justifications for making stops. The group also called for the police to require recording to enable justifying any frisks or stops. This would produce more data to help determine if any biases are at play.¹¹

Commissioner Garcia's supporters protested outside of the Mayor's office and during their eventual meeting with the mayor, they demanded not only an end to stop-and-frisk policies, but also that officers be required to wear body cameras and be punished if they turn them off during civilian interactions.¹²

On April 29, 2015, the Board of Commissioners gathered to discuss the proposed stop-and-frisk resolution. Those who opposed the resolution claimed that it overstepped the Board's authority. Commissioner Peter Silvestri (R-Elmwood Park) summarized this view: "This is not in our jurisdiction. This is an intrusion on the affairs of the city of Chicago."¹³ Proponents of the resolution, like Commissioner Richard Boykin (D-Chicago), claimed, "It is a powder keg waiting to explode... We're not binding the city of Chicago with this resolution. We're urging them to adopt these regulations."¹⁴ While Cook County President Toni Preckwinkle claimed that she would have voted "yes" if she were a commissioner, the Board, by a 5-6-6 vote, decided not to urge the city to adopt the reforms recommended by the ACLU.¹⁵

"The Good Friday Massacre"

On Good Friday in 2015, Governor Bruce Rauner made $26 million in cuts to social service and public health programs. Critics dubbed the barrage of cuts two days before Easter, "the Good Friday Massacre."¹⁶ Some major programs affected included "funding to pay for the funerals and burials of public-assistance recipients, smoking cessation, teen programs, autism, and HIV and AIDS programs, among other things."¹⁷

Governor Rauner's reason for making the $26 million in program cuts, was to alleviate the $1.6 billion budget hole he was facing. However, these cuts affected major social programs. Some immigration programs and services lost more than half their budgets. They faced a cut of $6.7 million and risked losing jobs. Another group, Teen Reach, provided after school tutoring and cultural activities. Its loss of $3.1 million significantly reduced the number of students who they could help and forced many students out of the program. The Department of Public Health lost $4.5 million and the Department of Human Services suffered the most with a cut of $21.8 million.¹⁸

Following these state budget cuts, the Board passed a resolution opposing the “Good Friday” suspensions. The resolution calling for restoration of the $26 million in cuts was passed by a mostly party-line vote of 6-5-6, with one Democrat and four Republicans voting against it.

Fee Increases for the Clerk of the Circuit Courts

Towards the end of 2015, the Board of Commissioners proposed ordinance amendments for court automation and document storage fees. The automation fee was imposed several decades ago to pay for “establishing and maintaining an automated record keeping system for the County courts.” In 1988, the automation fee was set at $3.00. Over the years, the fee has continually risen. An amendment considered in 2015 set the fee at $25.00 and a $20.00 increase for lawsuit filing.¹⁹

The fee increases are expected to raise about $4.9 million annually to help fund improvement in the document storage systems.²⁰ The commissioners passed the automation amendments with a 10-6-1 and document storage fees by 11-5-1 on November 18, 2015. These fee increases were made effective on December 1, 2015.²¹ After the vote, Preckwinkle said that she would not rule out future fee increases since the County's debt and government operating costs have continued to increase since she took office in 2010.²²

Increases in taxes were the biggest cause for divided votes in 2015 with twelve separate divided roll call votes. Nine focused on sales taxes, one was a property tax increase, one increased the hotel accommodations tax, and one was a firearms and ammunition tax.

President Preckwinkle proposed increasing property taxes to balance the 2016 budget. The Illinois Republican Party chairman and 15th District Commissioner, Tim Schneider, vehemently opposed this proposal and claimed that “Cook County families would call a property tax increase ill-conceived and irresponsible” and proposed killing this idea.²³ Consequently, the Board voted on April 1, 2015 on this proposed property tax increase. While all four of the Republicans on the board along with two Democrats voted against the property tax increases, the resolution passed with a 10-6-1 vote.

Another controversial divided tax vote, was on occupation taxes. In 2012 and 2013, the Board voted to reduce the Sales Tax by 1%. While these reductions were economically feasible earlier, the county later required an increase in those taxes back to the previous level. Several amendments were proposed but the votes to increase the sales tax on July 15, 2015 all passed with a 9-7-1 vote.²⁴

Another tax issue brought up during 2015, increased the Hotel Accommodations Tax to 17.4%. This one percent increase was expected to bring in an additional $31 million annually.²⁵ The proposed increase passed on November 18, 2015 by an 11-6 vote.

The final tax issue of 2015 was the Firearm and Firearm Ammunition Tax. The tax called for a $0.01 to $0.05 per bullet tax depending on the type of ammunition²⁶ and a $25 sales tax for firearms.²⁷ This tax attempted to combat the high gun violence rate in Chicago in the belief that the increased taxes would lower gun violence.²⁸ Every Republican board member voted against this tax along with three Democrats, but the fire arm taxes passed with a 10-7 vote on November 18, 2015. Commissioner Sean Morrison (R-Palos Park) said of the taxes, “The disconnect between the county board and the business community is staggering. How many times can you keep sucking money out of the private sector to feed big government? These new taxes bring permanent revenue streams which inevitably mean more spending.”²⁹

Lax Attendance at Meetings

As the Chicago Sun-Times and ABC-7 revealed in their investigative report of January 22, 2018, commissioners vary in their attendance at County Board and County Board Committee meetings from nearly 100% attendance to missing more than 30% of the meetings.

Commissioners John Daley (D-Chicago) and Richard Boykin have the best attendance While Commissioners Bridget Gainer and Jerry Butler have the worst. The table below gives the attendance profile of each commissioner. The absences include both Board of Commissioner and committee meetings.

President Preckwinkle’s office issued the following statement on attendance at meetings. “As a former teacher, President Preckwinkle understands well the importance of attendance. But more importantly she believes that barring extraordinary circumstance public officials must go the extra mile to ensure they honor the trust placed in them to properly administer to the public’s business.”

These absences have consequences. The commissioners with low attendance records also missing important divided roll call votes. Five commissioners missed no votes while some others missed as many as 30. In some cases this was due to death or retirement and time for a replacement to be appointed.

As Table 3 shows, in the last three years, Commissioner Jeff Tobolski (D-McCook) failed to vote on 31 divided roll call votes because he was absent. Commissioner John Fritchey (D-Chicago) was absent for 29 divided roll call votes and Commissioner Gregg Goslin (R-Glenview) missed 24 divided roll call votes.

Two commissioners missed more votes than Tobolski, Fritchey, and Goslin, but they either died or resigned before completing their terms.

Conclusion

After easily winning reelection in November 2014, Cook County Board President Toni Preckwinkle enjoyed overwhelming support from the board's 17 commissioners. During the first three years of her second term, she won every contested vote to come before the board with only two exceptions, one of which was politically much more important than the other.

As this report shows, since December 2015, when her second term began, 15 of the 17 commissioners, including Democrats and Republicans, supported President Preckwinkle's position on divided roll call votes more than 80 percent of the time. Closer examination of this group shows that eight Democrats voted with Preckwinkle more than 90 percent of the time, and four Democrats and three Republican supported her position 80 percent of the time," he added.

Only two commissioners voted to support Preckwinkle's positions less than 80 percent of the time overall. They were John A. Fritchey (D-Chicago) at 76 percent and Peter N. Silvestri (R- Elmwood Park) at 40 percent.
