Political Science 295: Introduction Marxism

This course explores the development of Marx's thought from his earliest through his latest writings. It also situates this thought within the tradition of Western political theory from the 17th through the 19th centuries. It asks, and attempts to answer, the following questions: Does Marx's theory successfully synthesize the pre-Marxian political theories of which it is both an outgrowth and a critique? To what extent is this (purported) theoretical synthesis adequate to the critical comprehension of contemporary capitalism? What, if any, modifications in his theory would be necessary to realize that objective?

There are three required texts for this course: Robert C. Tucker, ed., The Marx-Engels Reader, Philip Kain, Marx and Modern Political Theory, and Allen W. Wood, Karl Marx. Tucker's and Kain's books are available for purchase at Circle Center Bookstore. Wood's book is available for purchase in xerox form in my office.

One mid-term paper of from 5-7 double-spaced typed pages and one take-home essay final exam are required. Students are also expected to come to class regularly and to participate in discussion, which means they must do the relevant required reading prior to each class during which it will be discussed.

The following recommended readings are available at the library:

Shlomo Avineri, The Social and Political Thought of Karl Marx
Isaac D. Balbus, Marxism and Domination
Daniel Brudney, Marx's Attempt to Leave Philosophy
