The year 2015 was a banner year for corruption in the State of Illinois, the third most corrupt state in the nation. Based on the evidence in this report, it appears that our elected officials, our state and local governments, and society as a whole, are losing the battle against corruption.

The most salacious corruption case of the past year is rooted in Downstate Illinois. Dennis Hastert, former Speaker of the U.S. House of Representatives and former Congressman from the town of Plano, some 50 miles west of Chicago. Hastert was indicted by federal prosecutors in May for structuring the withdrawal of $1.7 million dollars in violation of bank laws and for lying to the FBI. According to news reports, Hastert gave the money to a former student of Yorkville High School to compensate him for concealing Hastert’s alleged misconduct decades ago when Hastert was a teacher and coach at the school. Hastert was convicted in October when he pleaded guilty to a felony count of evading bank reporting laws in a hush-money scheme. He is now awaiting sentencing.

While the Hastert indictment and conviction garnered national news headlines and was the most significant corruption story of the year, Illinois experienced many additional corruption events in 2015. In this report, we document 27 convictions, 28 indictments, and the launching of 11 corruption investigation. In addition we cover the sentencing of 30 public corruption convicts last year, most of whom were convicted in a year or two before 2015.

Almost all of the corruption cases were the work of U.S. Attorneys in Illinois' three federal judicial districts: the Northern District, which is based in Chicago and handled a large majority of the total, and the Central and Southern Districts. We include six public corruption cases reported by the Cook County State's Attorney in 2015 but did not have the resources to survey the other 101 county state's attorneys in Illinois.

In the following pages, we discuss a few corruption highlights of the past year and then summarize the corruption cases under these headings: Illinois Congressmen; Chicago; Police Corruption and Abuse; Cook County; the Suburbs and Collar Counties; the State Capitol; and Medicare and Medicaid fraud.

This report covers corruption convictions and other legal actions in 2015. It is a follow-up to Corrupt Illinois by Thomas J. Gradel and Dick Simpson, published in February 2015, by the University of Illinois Press. (See: www.press.uillinois.edu/books/catalog/78ndq5ty9780252078552.html)
Corruption Highlights, 2015

In April, just days after Chicago Mayor Rahm Emanuel was elected to a second term, two mega scandals burst into the public's consciousness followed by state and federal investigations, legal settlements, indictments, at least one convictions, and months of news headlines.

The first of these, the fatal shooting by a police officer of 17-year-old Laquan McDonald, was seen as so horrific and likely unjustified that on April 11th, Chicago's top lawyer asked the Finance Committee and then the full City Council to approve a $5 million payment to the teenager's family. The State's Attorney and the U.S. Attorney then announced that they were conducting investigations into the shooting death.

Throughout the summer and fall, the City, with the Mayor's approval, fought the release of videos showing that Officer Jason Van Dyke, who is white, shot Laquan McDonald, an African-American, as he walked away from the officer who continued to fire more than a dozen shots into the youth's body as he lay on the ground. Despite numerous protests and requests from the community, aldermen and the news media, the city would not release the video recordings and neither the State's Attorney nor the federal prosecutors filed any charges in the case.

Finally on the day before Thanksgiving, following a judge's order, the City released video recordings from police dashboard cameras and State's Attorney Anita Alvarez announced that she charged Officer Van Dyke with first-degree murder. Protestors jammed traffic in the downtown business district and on Michigan Avenue asserting that the Mayor covered up the shooting until after his reelection and the State's Attorney helped by refusing or delaying prosecution. A week later as protests continued, Mayor Rahm Emanuel fired Police Superintendent Gary McCarthy. Then the U.S. Justice Department announced that it was launching a wide-ranging civil rights investigation into the Chicago Police Department.

On December 16, a Cook County Grand Jury indicted Officer Van Dyke on six murder charges and one count of official misconduct. At the end of the month, Van Dyke pled not-guilty and was released after posting the required 10 percent of a $1.5 million bail.

While Officer Van Dyke has not yet been tried, several other police officers have been fired, resigned or pushed into retirement and several investigations are ongoing. This case and investigations into the cover-up will continue to play out for a few years. However, its impact on Chicago's reputation for corruption and police abuse of African-Americans will continue for long afterwards.

On the same day City Council approved the $5 million payment in the Laquan McDonald's shooting, another mega scandal grabbed the headlines. Although a good bit of this scandal was reported nearly two years earlier in October, 2013 by Catalyst magazine, it received little attention until after the Mayor's re-election on April 7th.

Then on April 15th, Catalyst and the Chicago Sun-Times reported that the FBI was investigating Chicago Public Schools’ award of a more than $20 million no-bid contract to SUPES Academy that formerly employed CPS CEO Barbara Byrd-Bennett.

Like the shooting of Laquan McDonald, this scandal continued to fester for months. After a quiet investigation by the CPS Inspector General in 2013, a federal investigation was launched. In May 2015, Barbara Byrd-Bennett resigned and in October, she was indicted by the U.S. Attorney. He charged her with steering $23 million worth of contracts to her former employer, SUPES Academy. Two executives who owned SUPES, the company itself, and another company they owned were also charged. On October 12, Barbara Byrd-Bennett pleaded guilty and is awaiting sentencing.

Illinois' Errant Congressmen

Three Congressmen, in addition to Dennis Hastert, who served Illinois in the U.S. House of Representatives, drew unwanted attention in 2015 to their illegal or unethical behavior.

Former Congressman Mel Reynolds, a Chicago Democrat, was indicted by federal prosecutors for failing to file income tax returns for four years. He has been in trouble before. In 1995, he was convicted for having sex with an underage campaign worker. Three years later after resigning and going to prison, he was convicted for bank fraud, misusing campaign funds, and lying to the Federal Election Commission. In 2001 President Clinton commuted his seven-year sentence to allow Reynolds to spend his last two years in a half-way house. In 2014, Reynolds was deported from Zimbabwe after he pleaded guilty to staying longer than his visa permitted. Charges that he had pornographic images on his phone were dropped.

Congressman Aaron Schock, a Republican from Peoria, resigned his House seat in March after news stories about his misuse of campaign funds and his spending nearly $40,000 of taxpayers' money to remodel his office like a "Downton Abbey" set. He is the target of an ongoing federal grand jury investigation, but to date, he has not been indicted.

Jesse Jackson, Jr., who had been in federal prison for 18 months was released to a half-way house and then to his home in Washington, D. C. The Chicago Democrat was convicted in 2013 for conspiring with his wife, Chicago Alderman Sandi Jackson for stealing $750,000 in campaign funds and spending it on vacations, clothing and luxury items.
Chicago, a Corruption Leader

Chicago residents experienced a very active corruption scene in 2015. In addition to the conviction of Chicago Public Schools CEO Barbara Byrd-Bennett and the indictment of Police Officer Jason Van Dyke for the murder of Laquan McDonald, corruption raised its larcenous head in the city's aldermanic offices, in public schools, among those charged with letting contracts, and in several city departments.

Sandi Jackson, who had resigned as 7th Ward Alderman in January 2013, entered a federal prison camp last October after her husband, Jesse Jackson, Jr., returned from prison. (See above.) In February 2013, she was convicted of conspiring to commit wire fraud, mail fraud and making false statements.

Curtis Thompson, Chief of Staff for Alderman Howard Brookins, Jr., (21st Ward) was sentenced in May to 15 months in prison after pleading guilty to receiving a $7,500 bribe from an undercover federal informant who wanted Brookins to support a liquor license for a convenience store in the 21st Ward. Brookins was investigated but has not been indicted or charged.

Former Alderman, Edward Vrdolyak was named as a witness in an $800,000 federal income tax case. Attorney Daniel Soso was indicted for failing to pay taxes on income he received in connection with Illinois' lawsuit against tobacco companies. According to the indictment, Soso received some of the income from a hidden arrangement with an individual said to be Vrdolyak, but he was not charged in this case. Vrdolyak was 10th Ward Alderman from 1971 to 1987. He was convicted in 2007 of conspiracy in a real estate kickback scheme.

In August, Karen Finley, CEO of Redflex Traffic Systems Inc., pleaded guilty to funneling cash and other personal financial benefits to a Chicago official and his friend, knowing that the payments would help persuade the city to award red-light camera contracts to Redflex. Earlier she pleaded guilty to a similar scheme in Ohio. The city official, John Bills, was found guilty in January, 2016. Last September, the City of Chicago sued Redflex in an attempt to recover $300 million from the firm.

There were three additional note-worthy convictions last year in Chicago:

- A tax and license compliance supervisor in the city's Business and Consumer Affairs Department pleaded guilty to official misconduct and for the theft of more than $2,000 worth of unstamped cartons of cigarettes confiscated by inspectors.
● A clerk, working for the Chicago Department of Transportation and the Office of Emergency Management and Communication, pleaded guilty to stealing $741,299 worth of checks for city permits.

● A federal prison chaplain, who ministered to convicted Family Secrets killer, Frank Calabrese, Sr., pleaded guilty to passing messages from Calabrese who was trying to hide a valuable Stradivarius violin from government seizure. In the U.S. District Court in Chicago, Catholic Priest Eugene Klein pleaded guilty to conspiracy to defraud the United States.

These are some additional indictments handed down and investigations launched in 2015:

● In June, FBI agents obtained warrants to search two email accounts tied to an executive of LAZ Parking who allegedly received $90,000 in bribe payments to steer a $22 million contract for (Chicago) parking meters to a favored company. The Chicago Sun-Times reported that the executive was Felipe Oropesa, of Marietta, Ga., and that he was expected to plead guilty in federal court in Atlanta. Two days later, the paper reported that federal prosecutors alleged that George Levey, of Cale Parking Systems USA Inc., admitted that he paid $90,000 to Oropesa, who helped him craft a bid for the Chicago contract.

● Two co-owners of 350Green LLC of Los Angeles were indicted for scheming to defraud Chicago and other governments of grants intended to establish charging stations for electric vehicles. The indictment alleges that the company obtained $2.9 million in grants after falsely claiming that it purchased and paid subcontractors and vendors for battery chargers. The indictment seeks forfeiture of $1.9 million.

● Staffers at two public schools were the targets of arrests warrants in an investigation of the theft of more than $876,000 from Gage Park and Michele Clark high schools. The investigation was a joint effort by CPS' Inspector General and the Cook County State's Attorney.

In addition to those mentioned above, three individuals were sentenced last year:

● A Chicago revenue inspector was sentenced to 12 months probation for extortion for accepting a $500 bribe to alert a store owner about upcoming inspections.

● A prison guard was sent to prison for three years for stealing identities of inmates for the purpose of filing illegal tax returns.

● A former Chicago resident, who previously pleaded guilty to accepting cash payments to help 80 people file false bankruptcy petitions as a way of avoiding City of Chicago impound fees, was sentenced to 18 months in federal prison.
Crime and Abuse by Chicago Police

The alleged unjustified shooting of Laquan McDonald by Chicago Police Officer Jason Van Dyke and the alleged cover-up of the killing, if proven, will rank as the most horrendous single example of police abuse and corruption in Chicago in decades. But additional cases last year attracted a great deal of public attention.

In November, shortly before Thanksgiving, then CPD Superintendent Gary McCarthy moved to fire Police Officer Dante Servin, who is white, for shooting an African-American woman in 2012. Last April, Servin became the first police officer since 1997 to go on trial for a fatal shooting. Servin had been charged with involuntary manslaughter for shooting over his shoulder from his car at several individuals and killing Rekia Boyd. In the middle of the trial the judge threw out the case because Servin had been charged incorrectly. The judge ruled that he should have been charged with murder. After waiting six months, McCarthy said he would ask the Police Board to approve the firing of Servin. He was still on the Police Department payroll when this report was published. In early December, McCarthy was fired by Mayor Emanuel.

In another police misconduct case, Commander Glenn Evans was acquitted on charges that he had shoved his gun down a suspect Rickey Williams' throat, despite the fact that Williams' DNA was found on Evans's gun. On December 14, a Cook County judge ruled that there were inconsistencies in the Williams' testimony and that there were other ways to explain how the DNA got on Evans' gun.

On the same day, a federal judge ruled in a civil lawsuit that a Chicago police civilian employee used unnecessary "brute force when he dragged a handcuffed suspect out of his cell and down the hallway. While still in his cell, the suspect was shocked three times with a Taser. The judge also said a police officer supervisor failed to stop the abuse. Later, the suspect died at a hospital reportedly from a fatal reaction from a drug that was administered.

In January last year, five officers were charged in a fight with two men outside a Golden Nugget restaurant. Three of the officers were charged with battery and two were charged with failing to de-escalate an unprovoked attack on the two men.

In other cases, a Chicago Police Sergeant pleaded guilty to passing information to a store clerk for cash payments; another police officer was sentenced to a year in prison for his part in a scheme to extort tow truck drivers in return for steering business their way, and a female civilian CPD employee was sentenced to two years in prison for stealing money and personal property from the police evidence section.
Cook County, A.K.A. Crook County

For Cook County Circuit Court Clerk, Dorothy Brown, the year 2015 was, to quote Queen Elizabeth II, "an annus horribilis." Clerk Brown and her husband, Benton Cook III, have been investigated by the federal government in probes that began as far back as May 2014. That's when the Chicago Sun-Times reported that Brown's husband was subpoenaed to appear before a federal grand jury investigating Cook's role in receiving grants from the state's anti-violence program.

In August 2015, Brown was slated for re-election by the Cook County Democratic Party despite rumors that not only her husband but that she too was the target of a federal investigation, which she denied.

Then in October, the Chicago Sun-Times reported that the FBI was investigating whether Brown accepted loans from employees in exchange for jobs or promotions. The Chicago Tribune also reported that the FBI seized Clerk Brown's cell phone and was investigating a land deal with a campaign contributor that benefitted Brown and her husband.

To make matters worse for the embattled Brown, the Cook County Democratic Party withdrew its endorsement and instead, by an unanimous vote of the county's 80 Democratic committeemen, threw its support behind Ald. Michelle Harris (8th Ward) for the Clerk's seat.

Before the horrible year came to an end, a former employee in Clerk Brown's office was indicted by the U.S. Attorney for lying to a grand jury about his hiring after allegedly making a $15,000 loan to a company controlled by Brown's husband. To date neither Dorothy Brown nor Benton Cook have been indicted or charged with any crime.

Three Cook County employees were convicted last year of corruption related crimes:

- An official in the county's Forest Preserve District pleaded guilty to bribery for accepting a $10,000 kickback to steer contracts to a west suburban construction company owner who was working undercover for the FBI. He was sentenced to a year in prison.

- A sheriff's police officer pleaded guilty to interference with commerce with threats of violence. He also admitted that he and two other officers carried out at least eight robberies of drug dealers yielding $300,000 in profits.

- A corrections officer pleaded guilty to smuggling marijuana and alcohol into Cook County jail.

Included among those indicted last year were a supervisor for the Cook County Health and Hospital System who was charged with stealing money paid for patient's medications and a clerk in the Recorder of Deeds office charged with accepting a bribe.
Corruption in the Suburbs and Collar Counties

Many of the corruption schemes in the suburbs display similar characteristics to the more notorious corruption cases in Chicago. Suburban cities, towns and villages also have kickback schemes, falsified documents, fraudulent contracts, and larcenous public officials using public funds for personal expenses. Additionally, many of these schemes have been underway for a long time, causing substantial financial losses, drawing negative attention, and staining the reputation of the affected municipalities.

The following examples aroused taxpayers' concern in 2015:

A former North Chicago School Board Member was sentenced to 30 months in federal prison for receiving at least $566,000 in kickbacks in a bus contract fraud scheme. For almost a decade between 2001 and 2010 several transportation companies received nearly $21 million in bus service contracts for the 4,000-student North Chicago Community Unit School District. The district has one of the highest low-income populations in Illinois. The guilty board member and four co-defendants grabbed more than $9.6 million in the fraud scheme.

In Melrose Park, a police detective was arrested and charged with attempting to possess and distribute five kilograms of cocaine. The detective allegedly stole narcotics held in evidence by the Melrose Park Police Department and replaced it with fake narcotics. According to the complaint, the defendant was also charged with possession of a firearm in furtherance of a drug trafficking crime.

A Kankakee County Sheriff’s Deputy, who previously was Police Chief in Countryside, pleaded guilty to mail fraud, money laundering, and tax evasion. Timothy J. Swanson established a tax-exempt organization, Illinois Regional Air Support Service (IRASS), while working for the Kankakee County Sheriff’s office. He collected contributions from various organizations and individuals. He then made personal purchases of more than $ 259,000 using IRASS' credit card.

Former Highwood Fire Department Deputy Chief Ronald Pieri was found guilty of defrauding Highwood taxpayers out of $70,000 by falsifying time records over four years by claiming compensation for hours that he did not actually work. He was found not guilty of official misconduct and theft of government property. At the time of his arrest in 2011, Pieri was the highest-ranking member of the Highwood Fire Department. After more than a year on paid administrative leave, the Fire and Police Commission in 2013 suspended him without pay.

A former Moecherville Water District Board President was charged with allegedly stealing $33,597 in cash water payments and bank account funds. The board president of a not-for-profit corporation that supplied water to households in Moecherville near Aurora, Illinois, was responsible for depositing customer’s payments in the district’s bank account. However, he allegedly converted to his own use funds that were designated to repay a federal program loan.

A former Dolton certified water operator was indicted for falsifying records to conceal his failure to properly sample drinking water for microbiological contaminants.

In the Village of Riverdale, a real estate developer was sentenced to 60 months in federal prison for defrauding Riverdale of over $370,000. John Thomas, 52, of Chicago, the owner of Nosmo Kings LLC, entered into a TIF agreement with Riverdale in 2012. Thomas submitted false documents for construction expenses, including invoices and checks paid to vendors that never actually performed any activities at the marina. One such document was an invoice for $25,750 for construction supplies from a company that was a currency exchange to which he owed money.

State Government Lawbreakers

Chicago and Cook County were not the only centers of political and public corruption in 2015. State government was a corruption hotbed as well.

As documented in the book Corrupt Illinois, the Prairie State has a long history of corruption. Illinois is the third most corrupt state in the nation and four of our last nine governors have served prison time. Former Governor Rod Blagojevich is the undisputed champion of modern Illinois corruption. He is the only governor to be impeached and thrown out of office even before his conviction in federal court. In 2015 he was still serving his fourteen year prison sentence.

However, in 2015 the new parade of felons and indicted officials was led by our less than illustrious state legislators. For instance, State Representative Derek Smith was sentenced in April to five months behind bars for pocketing $7,000 to send a letter of support for a state grant for a day care center in his district. Smith, like Blagojevich, was impeached and expelled from the state legislature after his indictment. He was the first member of the legislature to be expelled in 107 years. Yet, the voters reelected him handily in 2012. He was only removed from office for good after his conviction.

Then former State Representative Connie Howard was sentenced to three months in prison after being convicted in 2013 for using $28,000 taken from a charity for personal and political purposes. The money was from a charity golf outing she sponsored to raise funds for student scholarships.

State Representative LaShawn Ford was the luckiest of the state representatives. He was found not guilty of 17 felony counts for lying about his income on a $1.5 million business loan application. He pleaded guilty to filing a false federal tax return, but that was a misdemeanor which allowed him to remain in public office.

Finally, former State Representative Keith Farnham was sentenced to 96 months for child pornography.

These were not the only officials convicted for corruption in state and in local governments throughout the state. Many of the other convictions were for rigging contracts or stealing money directly. For instance, Leon and Karin Dingel were sentenced to prison after being convicted a year earlier of stealing $3.4 million in Illinois Department of Public Health Grants. Quinshaunta Golden in the same department was sentenced to eight years in prison for falsifying $13 million in grants and contracts in order to receive kickbacks from the recipients. Lesser officials in state government like a prison guard were sentenced to prison for schemes like identity theft in order to file illegal tax returns.

At the local government level, by far the most bizarre case was the suicide of Fox Lake Police Lt. Charles Gliniewicz, who killed himself while under investigation for stealing money from a youth program he ran. To hide his suicide, he staged the shooting to look like murder by three suspects he was tracking. Investigators suggested it was an attempt to cover up his own crimes.

Some of the other local government cases of corruption around the state include a former North Chicago School Board Member sentenced to 30 months in prison for bus contract fraud schemes.

Outside of the bigger schemes of governors and state legislators, most state and local officials were guilty of either contract rigging or stealing funds directly from our governments. Unfortunately, corruption is alive and well at all levels in Illinois.
Medical fraud in Illinois

Medical fraud is a white-collar crime that involves dishonest filling of medical claims or providing and billing for unnecessary medical treatments. This often affects elderly or disabled individuals who are recipients of federal or state medical benefits. Medical fraud schemes not only rip off the system, but also take advantage of vulnerable individuals and pose risks to their health.

In 2015, the Medicare Fraud Strike Force, which is part of the Health Care Fraud & Prevention Team, a joint initiative between the U.S. Department of Justice and the Department of Health and Human Services, HHS, carried out one of the largest corruption investigations in its history. The operation took place in 17 districts throughout the United States, resulting in charges against 243 individuals, including 46 doctors and other licensed medical professions, who allegedly participated in fraud schemes involving approximately $712 million in false billings.

Since its inception in 2007, Strike Force operations in nine states have charged over 2,300 defendants who collectively have falsely billed the Medicare program for more than $7 billion.

In 2015, a number of cases were prosecuted by the U.S. Attorney of Northern District of Illinois and twelve individuals were charged. In the Guerrero, et. al. case, seven individuals who worked at three home health care companies were charged with $45 million fraud between 2008 and 2014. The fraud as alleged included paying illegal bribes and kickbacks to obtain Medicare beneficiaries; ignoring doctors who refused to certify beneficiaries as “homebound” and eligible for care; enrolling patients who did not need or want the care; subjecting patients to pre-planned cycles of discharges and re-enrollments, regardless of their medical needs; and falsifying medical records to make patients appear to be homebound or sicker than they actually were.

Three other cases involved medical professionals also charged with health care fraud. In one, Zenaida Dimalig of Bensenville allegedly paid cash kickbacks to Medicare-covered patients, who, in turn, allowed their Medicare information to be used to bill Medicare for home-health services that these individuals did not need. Dimalig then passed on this Medicare information and records that falsely suggested that certain services were provided to Medicare beneficiaries to home health care agencies for the purpose of billing Medicare.

In another case Barry Fisher of River Forest, is alleged to have falsely certified patients as “confined to the home,” requiring skilled nursing services, and falsification of information in patient medical records.
In the third case, a Chicago dermatologist, Omeed Memar was indicted for health care fraud for allegedly billing cosmetic treatments fraudulently as the destruction of large numbers of pre-cancerous lesions. For a period of approximately six years between 2007 and 2013, Memar allegedly falsely diagnosed patients with actinic keratosis, ordered his staff to provide intense-pulsed light treatments for his patients, and instructed his staff to document the procedures falsely as the destruction of 15 or more precancerous lesions.

Other cases include: a $6 million Medicare fraud and kickback scheme at a Chicago home health care practice; kickbacks by a Chicago psychiatrist for prescribing anti-psychotic drugs; Medicare fraud by a psychologist and psychotherapy services; false billing of Medicare by a suspended physician; health-care fraud by the owner of two nursing agencies that provided unnecessary services to Medicare beneficiaries; a Medicare kickback conspiracy by owner and executives at closed Sacred Heart Hospital; a $23 million Medicare fraud conspiracy by leader of two health clinics; the falsification of Medicaid Waiver Program bills by a personal assistant in the Home Services Program; a $10.8 million fraud scheme by a Wheeling Chiropractic Group; and a $2.5 million health care fraud by the owner and operator of health clinics located in Park Ridge and Skokie, Illinois.

The prevalence of such a large number of medical fraud cases is evidence that corrupt acts are not confined to elected officials but can be found in the various professions, the business class and among average working men and women.

Lack of Faith in Government

Public opinion polls show that only 25% of the public trust our state government. We have the lowest level of trust of any state. By comparison 81% of the residents of North Dakota have confidence in their state and its leadership. This loss of faith in government is not only caused by the budget stalemate in Springfield and lowered bond ratings in Chicago but by the astounding level of corruption from city hall to the state house to even doctor’s offices.

Some strides were made this last year. Civics will now be required to be taught in school. The Chicago Inspector General is empowered to investigate charges of graft and corruption by Chicago aldermen and their staff members.

However, the high level of corruption we have documented in 2015 suggests that additional reforms are still needed such as:

1) Public funding of political campaigns.

2) A fair remap of all legislative districts.
3) Increased citizen participation in elections and government.
5) Fundamental changes in the Chicago Police Department to create greater police accountability and oversight.
6) Preventing public officials from representing private individuals and corporations for profit before other units of government.
7) Making public information available in more useable forms on the internet in a structured, open and searchable manner.

In the day by day list of corruption that follows we demonstrate how the work of changing the culture of corruption in Illinois is more urgent than ever.

“COD board reaffirms president's parachute”

The College of DuPage has had continual scandals throughout 2015 beginning in January with the approval of a retirement package of $763,000 for former COD President Robert Breuder. This was followed by the election of new Board of Trustee members and an exposure of the apparent misuse of expense accounts at the campus’ upscale Waterleaf restaurant which in 2012 had more than a $500,000 deficit which had to be covered by the college. Since then the restaurant has been closed.

In April an election of three new members of the Board of Trustees created a new majority which has since attempted to rescind the retirement package. The Higher Learning Commission has forced a reevaluation of the college’s accreditation which is necessary for the college to operate.

Since then one of the trustees has resigned and the Board remains mostly deadlocked, often unable to achieve a quorum even to meet. A number of different corruption investigations remain ongoing at the time this report is being written. Source-- Chicago Tribune, January 29, 2015

“Congressman Schock resigns House seat”

U.S. Rep. Aaron Schock resigned from the House of Representatives after six weeks of intense scrutiny over possible misuse of campaign and office funds. The scrutiny followed series of news stories about his extravagant spending for travel, entertainment for his staff, and the use of nearly $40,000 of taxpayers' funds to remodel his office like a "Downton Abbey" set. The Peoria area Congressman has been the target of a federal grand jury since April, 2015, but as of this writing he has not been indicted or charged with a crime. Schock's attorneys spent much of the second half of 2015 fighting with federal prosecutors over leaks, subpoenas and the delivery of documents. -- Sources: Chicago Tribune, March 18, 2015; Chicago Tribune, Nov. 19 and Chicago Sun-Times, Nov. 28, 2015
