The statistics do not completely reflect it, but 2019 was a highly explosive year, during which some of the most important political corruption in the history of Chicago and Illinois was exposed.

Bombshell corruption news reports that year dethroned the city's most powerful alderman, upset Chicago's mayoral election campaign, torpedoed the most powerful and well-known candidate, and threatened the political existence of Speaker of the Illinois House of Representatives and Chairman of the State Democratic Party, Michael Madigan.

Almost all of 2019's explosive corruption activity was not captured in the annual statistics compiled by the U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ) Criminal Division's Public Integrity Section because DOJ only reports federal public corruption convictions for the year the convictions occur. Most of the headline grabbing political corruption events of 2019 were reports on investigations, subpoenas, FBI raids, indictments, or other beginning steps in criminal prosecutions. Actual convictions take place at the end of the process, usually a year or more later.

What the DOJ statistics show

Nonetheless, the DOJ statistics show that since the department began collecting the data in 1976, Chicago is the most corrupt federal judicial district in the nation, and that Illinois, on a per capita basis, is the third most corrupt state.

Table 1 shows the rankings of the nation's top 15 judicial districts, including their major city, by the total number of public corruption convictions. Since 1976, Chicago had a total of 1,770 convictions and an average of 41 per year, Los Angeles had 1,588 and an average of 37, New York/Manhattan had 1,361 and an average of 32 per year, Miami had 1,234 and an average of 29, and Washington D.C. had 1,199 and an average of 28 per year.

Table 1:
Federal Public Corruption Convictions by Judicial District 1976-2019

However, if you look at only the last decade—from 2010 to 2019—Chicago slips to 6th place, tied with Miami, with 285 convictions. Richmond, Virginia is the leader with 391 convictions. It is followed by Baltimore, Maryland with 352, Los Angeles, California with 342, Newark, New Jersey with 303, and Austin/San Antonio, Texas with 290 (See Table 2).

15	Massachusetts (Boston)	188

*The ranking is shared with more than one District.

While the total number of federal convictions for public corruption in most cities has declined beginning in the 1990s, the most pronounced decreases have been in New York/Manhattan and Chicago (See Figure 1).

Federal convictions for public corruption in Illinois totaled 2,152 since the DOJ began collecting the data in 1976. While California, New York, and several other states had more federal public corruption convictions than Illinois, the Prairie State has a much smaller population and thus a higher rate of convictions per capita.

Bombshell Corruption

The DOJ public corruption conviction statistics for 2019 do not come close to capturing the significance of that year's corruption events. They miss both the large number and the importance of the public officials caught up in the year's political scandals.

The year 2019 was barely underway, when on January 2nd, the FBI filed a federal complaint charging Edward Burke, Alderman of the 14th Ward and Chairman of the powerful City Council Finance Committee, with attempted extortion. Ald. Burke allegedly used his office to extort business for his law firm in exchange for remodeling permits for a Burger King restaurant in his ward. The complaint revealed that FBI agents had recorded Burke's telephone conversations for more than 19 months.¹

Although Ald. Burke was under a cloud of suspicion since his ward and City Hall offices were raided by federal agents at the end of November 2018, neither the public nor Burke's fellow politicians knew the extent of the trouble he faced. The doubt ended when the FBI filled its complaint.

The next day, Mayor Rahm Emanuel announced that Ald. Burke had resigned as Finance Chairman. Emanuel and ordered an audit of the $100 million-per-year workers compensation program that had been under Burke's control.² Two weeks later, Sterling Bay, a major developer behind the proposed the massive Lincoln Yards development, announced that it dumped Burke's law firm as its property tax attorneys.

Then on January 23rd, the Chicago Tribune broke the story that Danny Solis, Alderman of the 25th Ward and Chairman of the City Council's Zoning Committee, had worn an undercover wire to record more than a dozen conversations with Burke over a two-year period. A week later, the Chicago Tribune reported that "Solis agreed to wear the recording device after he was confronted by law enforcement with evidence of his own alleged misdeeds – including seeking sexual services at a massage parlor."³ The newspaper also reported that Solis was under investigation for soliciting campaign donations from a street-sweeping company that wanted a reduction in its water bill. Solis is currently still cooperating with the federal investigation and to date has not been criminally charged.

On January 29, 2019, the Sun-Times reported that it obtained a federal affidavit stating that the FBI secretly recorded Illinois House Speaker Michael Madigan trying to get business for his law firm from a developer brought to him by Ald. Solis. The developer wanted to build a hotel in Chinatown and Madigan wanted a new client for his law firm. Madigan's law firm, like Burke's, is known for its successful property tax reduction work. Solis, according to the affidavit, told the developer's associate that "if he works with the speaker, he will get anything he needs for that hotel."⁴ Madigan has not been charged and he has said that neither he nor his law firm are under investigation.

However, Madigan had other unrelated legal and political trouble.

In March, Alaina Hampton, filed a federal sexual harassment lawsuit against four entities controlled by Speaker Madigan: the Democratic Party of Illinois, the Democratic Majority, the 13th Ward Democratic Organization, and Friends of Michael J. Madigan. Hampton accused Kevin Quinn, a Madigan aide and brother of 13th Ward Alderman Marty Quinn, of sending her a barrage of unwanted messages and phone calls in pursuit of a romantic and sexual relationship. Hampton settled the lawsuit on November 28, 2019 for $275,000. As a result of the allegation, Madigan fired Kevin Quinn. Madigan also forced the resignation of Tim Mapes, his chief of staff and clerk of the Illinois House, after Mapes was accused of making repeated inappropriate comments to a clerk in the Speakers office and on the House floor.⁵

In May 2019, Federal authorities raided the City Club's offices in the Wrigley Building on Michigan Ave for documents about Commonwealth Edison (ComEd). According to a WBEZ report, the raid was executing a subpoena seeking information on political hiring and contracting at Commonwealth Edison and that Michael Madigan was named in the subpoena.⁶ Much more of the Madigan-ComEd scheme would unfold in 2020.

Additional major corruption in 2019:

- On July 29th, John T. Coli, the former Secretary-Treasurer of Teamsters Local 727 and former president of Teamsters Joint Council 25, which represents more than 100,000 members in Illinois and Indiana, pleaded guilty to accepting $325,000 in cash from CineScape studios. After being indicted in 2017, but before his guilty plea, Coli was permanently expelled from the International Brotherhood of Teamsters by the union's president, James P. Hoffa.⁷

- Three days after Coli's guilty plea, Illinois State Senator Thomas Cullerton (D-Villa Park) was indicted by a federal grand jury for accepting more than $250,000 in salary and benefits as an organizer for the Teamsters. Cullerton was hired by Coli for a "ghost" job. In the indictment, prosecutors alleged that Cullerton did little or no work for the Teamsters but received the salary and benefits in violation of federal labor law.⁸

- In September, the home of State Senator Martin Sandoval (D-Cicero) was raided by federal law enforcement officials looking for evidence of bribery related to the placement of red-light cameras in suburban municipalities. Sandoval was indicted and pleaded guilty in 2020.⁹ He died in December 2020 of Covid-19 complications

- In October, State Representative Louis Arroyo (D-Chicago), who was also a lobbyist, was charged with bribing a state senator to obtain changes in Illinois gambling laws to benefit his client.¹⁰

- In May, the Chicago police arrested 1st Ward Alderman Proco "Joe" Moreno on felony charges of insurance fraud and obstruction of justice. Ald. Moreno had reported that his car missing, but weeks later, police located it in the possession of his former girlfriend. According to the ex-girlfriend, Moreno gave her permission to use the car and then falsely reported it stolen.¹¹ Moreno, who lost reelection in 2019, was later charged with drunken driving. He was jailed in January 2021 for violating the conditions of his bond.

- In June, federal agents raided the office of 34th Ward Alderman and Chair of the Council's Budget Committee Carrie Austin. The fact that Ald. Austin was under investigation likely contributed to her failure to retain chairmanship of the Budget Committee.¹²

- Also, in June, former 20th Ward Alderman Willie Cochran was sentenced to one year and a day after he pleaded guilty to federal fraud charges. Cochran admitted to using his ward's activities fund for personal expenses rather than the fund's intended purpose. From January 2010 until April 2014, Cochran pocketed approximately $14,285 from the fund.¹³

Harvey, Illinois

Harvey, a city of about 25,000 people, experienced a high level of corruption in 2019 for its small size. On March 6th, the U.S. Attorney announced indictments of six defendants in three separate corruption cases.

In the first case, Rommell Kellogg and Corey Johnson, two high-ranking city officials who were also cousins, conspired to extort a local strip club owner. According to the indictment, Kellogg and Johnson were aware that prostitution was occurring at the club. However, instead of reporting it, they threaten to shut the club down if the owner did not make regular payments to them.

In the second case, police officers, Derrick Muhammad and Derrick Moore, were charged with obstruction of justice. According to the indictment, Muhammad and Moore falsified police reports to protect two acquaintances facing firearm charges. The acquaintances, a father and son team, were both felons and could not legally possess firearms. After their car was reported stolen, found, and towed, the father and son learned that the tow company had found a firearm in their car. Upon realizing that the tow company had discovered the firearm, the father and son conspired with the officers to hide the gun's existence.

In the third case, city officials, Donald Luster and Will Wiley, allegedly solicited bribes from the owner of a suburban towing company. According to the indictment, Luster, a private consultant to

Harvey and former mayor of Dixmoor, solicited bribes from the towing company, with the promise that the owner would be allowed to lease a parcel of land owned by the city of Harvey. Wiley was to act as the "bagman" and collect the cash while Luster negotiated the transactions. At the time, neither Luster nor Wiley knew that the tow company owner was cooperating with federal law enforcement.¹⁴

Two days after the six Harvey indictments were issued, the Cook County Sheriff's Office opened an investigation into vote-buying in Harvey's mayoral election, then underway. After the first day of early voting on February 11, the County Clerk's office began receiving reports of vote-buying. As a result, the Sheriff's office contacted the State's Attorney and dispatched nine suburban police officers to guard polling places on election day and combat potential electioneering. At the time this report was published, all the mayoral candidates have denied that they participated in any plan to buy votes and no candidates has been charged.¹⁵

Chicago Police Department

On January 17, 2019, three Chicago police officers, who allegedly covered-up the shooting murder of Laquan McDonald, an unarmed seventeen-year-old African American, by Jason Van Dyke, a white police officer, were acquitted of conspiracy and obstruction of justice.

In March 2017, Van Dyke was found guilty of six counts of first-degree murder and sixteen counts of aggravated battery, one for each shot fired at McDonald. The three policemen, Detective David March and officers Joseph Walsh and Thomas Gaffney, had witnessed or reported the shooting. In July 2019, the Chicago Police Board voted to fire the three officers for violating the police code of conduct.¹⁶

In May 2019, Chicago police officer Corey Deanes was arrested and charged with four felonies of aggravated battery and two misdemeanor battery counts. In 2017 and 2018, Deanes made “inappropriate and non-consensual physical contact with three women on separate occasions.”¹⁷

In August and September 2019, police officers Milot Cadichon and Kevin Tate pleaded guilty to participating in a bribery scheme. The two officers accepted bribes from an attorney referral service in exchange for exclusive information about crash victims and their insurance carriers. The officers received at least $10,000 in kickbacks from the attorney referral service. Upon conviction, both officers were also fired.^{18 19}

In October 2019, two Chicago police officers, Xavier Elizondo and David Salgado, were convicted of fraudulently obtaining search warrants and stealing cash and drugs from properties they searched. The two officers fabricated information to obtain search warrants on people suspected of drug dealing. After entering their homes, the officers would steal drugs and cash and falsify police reports about the searches.²⁰

Alison Yohanna, an employee with the Civilian Office of Police Accountability, Yohanna was forced to resign in 2019 for improperly accessing records of officers and falsifying reports. According to the city Inspector General, Yohanna accessed records of family members and a boyfriend, who were Chicago police officers, and made false accusations against coworkers. Once the conduct was discovered, the city attempted to fire Yohanna. She challenged the decision but eventually agreed to resign and was designated ineligible for rehire.²¹

Finally, the most notorious 2019 case of criminal police activity involved former officer Eddie Hicks. In March 2019, a federal jury convicted Hicks on eight counts, including conspiracy to commit racketeering, drug conspiracy, possession of a controlled substance with intent to distribute, among other crimes. For years, Hicks had organized a robbery crew of police officers. Using the guise of police investigations, the crew conducted phony drug raids and automobile stops of suspected drug dealers; the crew then threatened them with arrest, and kept the drugs, weapons, and cash they found.²²

Corruption and misconduct by police officers and other employees of the Chicago Police Department can be very costly for taxpayers. According to the city’s Law Department, in 2019, Chicago paid $46,785,000 in settlements and court awards for cases involving police misconduct. This does not include the costs of work on these cases by attorneys and staff of the Law Department.

Payouts by Chicago for Settlements and Court Orders for Police Misconduct, 2019

Type	Payouts	Number of Cases
Settlements	$20,751,500	110
Court Orders	$26,034,100	6
Total	$46,785,600	116

Criminal conduct in schools and colleges

In January 2019, James Hernandez, a former elevator mechanic at the University of Illinois-Chicago, pleaded guilty to federal bribery and conspiracy to commit bribery charges. Hernandez operated a kickback scheme with the owner of Smart Elevators Company, Suzy Martin. Over the years, Martin paid Hernandez at least $83,530 for directing elevator repairs to her company.²³

In May, the Executive Inspector General reported that former Southern Illinois University (SIU) President, Dr. Randy Dunn, improperly worked to get the incoming Chancellor Dr. Carlo Montemagno’s daughter and son-in-law hired. Dr. Dunn was also accused of violating SIU's policies when hiring the SIU’s Vice President of Academic Affairs.²⁴

In August, Andrew Parro, a title-winning water polo coach for Chicago Public Schools, pleaded guilty to multiple counts of theft and misuse of school property. Parro rented out the school’s pool and pocketed the payments. Between 2013 and 2016, Parro made nearly $30,000 off the scheme.²⁵

The most significant example of corruption in an education institution, in terms of monetary losses, involved former Vice-Chancellor for City Colleges of Chicago Sharod Gordon. In November 2019, Gordon and seven co-defendants were indicted on charges of federal wire fraud. The indictment alleged that Gordon received bribes and kickbacks in exchange for steering City College contracts to preferred vendors. The indictment seeks to recover approximately $349,500 in criminally derived proceeds.²⁶

Finally, in 2019, Chicago Public Schools’ (CPS) Office of Inspector General (OIG) formed a new Sexual Allegations Unit to bring accountability to the CPS. For years, CPS had or ignored or improperly handled allegations of sexual abuse of students by teachers, coaches, security guards, and other school employees. Previously, only CPS’s Law Department investigated matters related to sexual assault. However, after the public became aware of several grossly mishandled cases, CPS’s inspector general decided to take on the responsibility. The OIG created an inventory of allegations. As Table 5 shows, for the 2019 fiscal year, CPS averaged approximately three sexual assault allegations per school day.

Table 5:
Sexual Assault Allegations of CPS Employees Oct. 2018 through June 30, 2019

	Oct	Nov	Dec	Jan	Feb	Mar	Apr	May	June

The OIG's findings were obviously disturbing, but Inspector General Nicholas Schuler assured the public that his agency would remain vigilant in addressing the issue. In an interview with ABC News, he said, "Once you start figuring out what the numbers are and reporting on them, they will surprise a lot of people. But that's the point... We want to make sure that we are on top of this."²⁷

An Explanation of the DOJ statistics

There are limits to understanding corruption through the Department of Justice Criminal Division's Public Integrity Section report. First, the DOJ report does not list or describe the individual cases behind the convictions; it does not include federal actions other than convictions, such as criminal investigations, indictments, and sentencing. The annual report also does not include corruption convictions by state and local law enforcement agencies.

To establish a fuller picture of political corruption in Illinois, it is necessary to examine other sources. In addition to the DOJ reports, the authors of this report examined reports from the Illinois Office of the Executive Inspector General, the Inspector General of Chicago, the Inspector General of Chicago Public Schools, and news reports on corruption published in local newspapers and on the web. In Appendix 1 of this report, there is a "day-by-day" account of the incidents of public corruption throughout the state.

Many of the cases that were initiated in 2019 were not completed, not only because these normally take a few years, but also because the Covid-19 pandemic in 2020 slowed prosecutions. The courts were closed for much of the year, jury trials were halted, and other matters were handled virtually. For this reason, the authors of this report suspect that the number of convictions in the DOJ's 2020 report will likely show a major drop compared to 2019, along with an increase in convictions in 2021 when the courts fully reopen.

Appendix 1

2019 Corruption Day by Day

January 3, 2019

Pleaded Guilty

James Hernandez, a former elevator mechanic at the University of Illinois-Chicago, plead guilty to federal bribery and conspiracy to commit bribery. Hernandez and Suzy Martin, owner of Smart Elevators Company, operated a kickback scheme where Martin paid Hernandez for directing repair services to her company. Martin paid Hernandez at least $83,530 in kickbacks. In response to the scandal, the Illinois State Office of Executive Inspector General recommended that UIC implement new procedures to ensure services are warranted and actually performed.

January 9, 2019

Indicted

A Lake County grand jury indicted for former State Representative Nick Saur on 12 felony charges for allegedly sharing nude photos of an ex-girlfriend online. In August of 2018, Sauer resigned from his office after his ex-girlfriend reported to law enforcement that Saur had created a fake Instagram account to post sexually explicit of her.

March 6, 2019

Indicted

Six defendants were charged as part of a federal investigation of three separate corruption schemes in Harvey, Illinois. Rommell Kellogg and Corey Johnson, cousins, were charged with conspiracy to commit extortion. The two high-ranking city government officials allegedly extorted payments from a local strip club owner based on threats that if the owner did not pay, the city would shut down the business. The charges allege that in exchange for payments, city officials allowed the business to operate as a brothel.

Derrick Muhammad and Derrick Moore were charged with obstruction of justice and conspiracy to obstruct justice. Muhammad and Moore were Harvey police officers who allegedly collaborated to falsify police reports to protect acquaintances facing firearm charges.

Finally, Donald Luster and Will Wiley were charged with conspiracy to commit federal bribery. Luster, a private consultant to Harvey, worked with Wiley to solicit bribes from a local owner of a towing company from a nearby suburb. In exchange for the bribe, Luster allegedly provided the entrepreneur with a parcel of land owned by the city.

Reprimand

An Office of Executive Inspector General investigation revealed that Katherine Patti Deputy Chief Administrative Law Judge for the Illinois Property Tax Appeal Board, facilitated the hiring of a relative at the law firm Amari & Locallo. During the relative’s employment, Judge Patti assigned herself to 261 cases where the firm represented a party. The O EIG investigation determined that Judge Patti violated the Property Tax Appeal Board’s policy, but it did not find evidence that she improperly favored the firm. In response to the report, the Board held a counseling session with Judge Patti and agreed to revise its conflicts of interest policies.

Indicted

Donald Donagher Jr. was indicted on federal bribery charges. From 2009 to 2016, Donagher Jr., the owner of a debt collection company Penn Credit, allegedly bribed to clerks in the Cook County Circuit Court in exchange for favorable treatment in the awarding of the courts' debts work and sale of indictments. The bribes included campaign contributions to certain clerks' campaign, donations to charities supported by certain clerks, and sponsorships of events hosted by certain clerks.

Convicted

A federal jury convicted Eddie Hicks on eight counts, including conspiracy to commit racketeering, drug conspiracy, and possession of a controlled substance with intent to distribute. Hicks, a former Chicago police officer, and three other officers organized a robbery crew that targeted suspected drug dealers. Using the guise of legitimate police investigations, the crew conducted phony drug raids and automobile stops of suspected dealers; threatened them with arrest; and then kept the drugs, weapons, and cash they found on the suspects.

March 19, 2019

Fined

The Illinois State Executive Ethics Commission imposed a $500 fine on Robert Hittmeier for failing to comply with the Illinois State Officials and Employees Ethics Act. Between December 2013 until December 15, 2016 Hittmeier acted as the Hospital Administrator for the Illinois Department of Human Services. From October 16, 2016 until June 9, 2017, Hittmeier served as a warden with the Illinois Department of Correction. Illinois law requires each executive branch officials to report to the Office of Executive Inspector General any changes in employment that may give them “the authority to participate personally and substantially in the award of State contracts or in regulatory or licensing decisions.” Hittmeier failed to report his employment change.

April 12, 2019

Indicted

Charles Cui, a real estate developer living in Lake Forest, was indicted on federal bribery charges. Cui allegedly steered private legal work to 14th Ward Alderman Ed Burke in exchange for Burke’s support in granting Cui’s business a permit and creating a $2 million tax increment plan financing for a Northwest Side redevelopment project owned by Cui’s company.

Findings and Recommendations

An Office of Executive Inspector General investigation found that state employees were regularly parking in the Illinois Department of Transportation Emergency Traffic Patrol parking lot near Guaranteed

Rate Field, home of the Chicago White Sox, during games to avoid paying for parking. The investigation found that the free parking privileges were extended to the IDOT employees, Governor's Office staff, and State legislators. In response to the report, the IDOT agreed to end the practice.

April 15, 2019

Fined

The Illinois State Executive Ethics Commission fined former Illinois Department of Human Services (IDHS) employee Mark Doyle for violating the Illinois State Officials and Employees Ethics Act's revolving door prohibition. Doyle was responsible for overseeing the closure of state-operated developmental disability and psychiatric care centers and moving the residents of these centers to community-based settings. To assist with closures and transitions, IDHS contracted with Community Resource Associates, Inc. Doyle left his position with the DHS to work as a consultant for a private business, BennBrook, Inc. Doyle submitted a revolving door determination request to the Office Executive of Inspector General but did not disclose that BennBrook was contracting to do work with Community Resource Associates. Doyle was fined $154,056 for the violation. It was the largest amount ever assessed under the State Officials and Employees Ethics Act.

Findings and Recommendations

An Office of Executive Inspector General investigation revealed that former Southern Illinois University President, Dr. Randy Dunn, improperly negotiated the hiring of incoming Chancellor Dr. Carlo Montemagno's daughter and son-in-law, and that Dr. Dunn violated SIU's policies when hiring a Vice President of Academic Affairs. In response to the report, UIC did not proceed with the hiring plans of Dr. Dunn. The university also implemented numerous changes to its hiring procedures.

Arrested & Charged

Corey Deanes, a police officer with the Chicago Police Department, was arrested and charged with four felonies of aggravated battery and official misconduct, and two misdemeanor counts of battery.
