Lori Lightfoot, a former Assistant U.S. Attorney and a partner in a prestigious high-powered law firm, was sworn into office on May 20, 2019 as Mayor of the City of Chicago. A few weeks earlier, Lightfoot overwhelmingly carried all 50 Chicago wards and defeated former Alderman and Cook County President Toni Preckwinkle,

Sworn in the same day were 50 aldermen. As voting members of the City Council, they, together with Mayor Lightfoot, would govern Chicago, the third largest city in the nation. This new council included a dozen freshman aldermen, seven of whom defeated incumbents. Among these twelve were five women, three African Americans, five Latinos, two members who identified as LGBT, five members of the Democratic Socialists of America, and one independent.

The public and the news media questioned how the new Mayor and the City Council would work together. Would the Council continue to be a "Rubber Stamp," and agree to everything the Mayor wanted? Or would it be "Council Wars" all over again?

For much of Chicago's history since the mid-1950s, the Council has been a Rubber Stamp. That was true under the 43 years dominated by Mayors Richard J. and Richard M. Daley. It was mostly true under Mayors Michael Bilandic, Jane Byrne, and Rahm Emanuel. The exceptions were the five-year period under Harold Washington and for Mayor Eugene Sawyer's abbreviated two-year term.

For this report, we compared Aldermanic voting patterns during Mayor Lightfoot's first two years to the Aldermanic voting patterns during the last two years of Mayor Emanuel's second term. Besides the fact that Mayor Emanuel was completing his reign and Mayor Lightfoot was just getting underway, there were other factors that made comparisons difficult: many council members were new, some issues were new, the electorate had changed, and a Coronavirus swept into the city before Lightfoot completed her first year in office. Yet some clear patterns emerge.

Key Similarities

- Lightfoot, as did Emanuel, won City Council approval for all her recommendations for chairmen of Council Committees.
- Both Lightfoot and Emanuel successfully passed their budgets and spending plans.
- Neither Lightfoot nor Emanuel lost any City Council vote on issues they introduced or championed.
- Under Emanuel, 43 aldermen voted 80% or more of the time to support the Mayor's position on all divided roll call votes.
- For Lightfoot, 40 aldermen voted 80% or more for her positions.

Key Differences

- Mayor Rahm Emanuel presided over a "Rubber Stamp" City Council.
 - 19 aldermen voted 100% of the time to support Emanuel's positions.
 - 15 additional aldermen voted 90 to 99% of the time with Emanuel.
- Under Mayor Lori Lightfoot, change is undeniably occurring.
 - only 2 aldermen voted 100% of the time to support Lightfoot's position.
 - 23 additional aldermen voted 90 to 99% of the time with Lightfoot.

The City Council is, in fact, becoming more independent and more liberal than under Mayor Rahm Emanuel. Mayor Lightfoot's agenda is also considerably more progressive than Emanuel's. And that has given rise to more opposition from both long-serving aldermen and from some freshman aldermen who are pushing Lightfoot to be more liberal or progressive.

Nonetheless, Mayor Lightfoot has been able to govern with a Center-Liberal majority. She has successfully won support for and passed her legislation, but not without meaningful dissent, compromises, and amendments.

To determine the voting patterns in the council under Mayors Emanuel and Lightfoot, we studied all the divided roll call votes in the last two years of the Emanuel administration and the first two years of the Lightfoot administration. We then calculated each alderman's percentage of agreement with the Mayor's position. Finally, we ranked the aldermen by their percentage of agreement with the Mayor and grouped them in batches of 10 percentage points: for example, 80 to 89%, 90 to 99%, etc. To compare each Mayor's level of Aldermanic support, we then examined the number of aldermen in each grouping.

Why divided roll call votes?

Our analysis of City Council voting focuses on divided roll call votes. By definition, that is any vote which is not unanimous. Each year aldermen cast more than a thousand votes, but most votes are noncontroversial and pass unanimously. There are only a few dozen divided roll call votes each year and we focus on those as they are the most revealing and among the most contentious and controversial.

We compared each alderman's vote to the mayor's position and then calculated the percentage of agreement with the mayor. However, the mayor does not vote in the city council, except to break a tie, which almost never happens. Because of this, the votes of the Mayor's floor leader and/or Finance Committee Chair are assumed to be proxies for the Mayor's votes. If the floor leader's votes did not provide a clear indication of the mayor's stand on the issue, we used press reports of the mayor's statements to determine the administration's positions.

From Rubber Stamp to Divided Council

From the data, two histograms (Figure 1 and Figure 2) are constructed that analyze the percentage of agreement with the mayor.

There are notable differences in the voting in the two city councils as shown in the histograms. For instance, under Mayor Emanuel, 34 aldermen, or 68% of the Council, agreed with him 90% of the time or more. In contrast, for Lightfoot only 25 aldermen, or 50% of the council agreed with her was 90% or more of the time. This shows how strongly Emanuel was able to control a compliant city council.

However, if you look at the 80% or more groupings, the differences decrease. Both Emanuel and Lightfoot enjoyed the support of 40 aldermen more than 80% of the time, which is equivalent to 80% of the council. However, for Emanuel it was 43 aldermen and for Lightfoot it was 40.

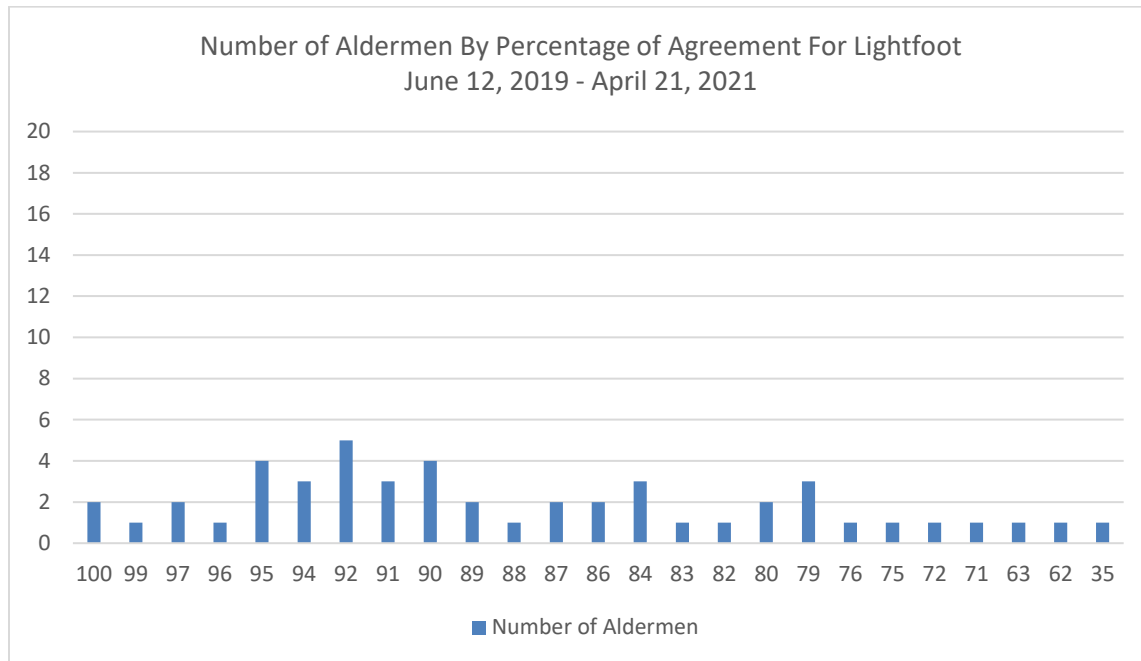

The disparity is more noticeable when the percentage of agreement is arrayed by the number of aldermen voting at particular levels of support. As Figure 3 demonstrates, the number of aldermen who agree with Mayor Emanuel are skewed toward the high end of the scale with 19 aldermen agreeing with the mayor 100% of the time.

As shown in Figure 4, the number of aldermen who voted with Mayor Lightfoot is more evenly distributed. Only two aldermen agreed with her 100% of the time. At the other end of scale, Lightfoot's lowest level of support from any one alderman was 34%, while Emanuel's was 69%.

The difference between Emanuel's and Lightfoot's levels of support by the city council may portend trouble for Lightfoot in subsequent years, but currently it does not appear to inhibit her government significantly. To date, Lightfoot has achieved majority support for all her legislation.

The Council has become more liberal

In addition to the city council becoming more divided, it has also become more liberal. While it is difficult to classify many pieces of local government legislation as either “liberal” or “conservative,” we can understand the political orientation of the council by looking at how the aldermen identify themselves and with whom they are aligned.

Table 4 is a list of aldermen who had 79% agreement or less with either Mayor Emanuel or Mayor Lightfoot. For aldermen who served in both councils, we show their level of support for the each of the two mayors.

The table shows that several aldermen experienced a substantial shift in their position. Aldermen who identified as “liberal,” “progressive” or “socialist,” dramatically increased their level of agreement when the mayor changed from Emanuel to Lightfoot. For example, Ald. Scott Waguespack (Ward 32) increased his support from 63% for Emanuel to 100% for Lightfoot. Sophia King (Ward 4) jumped from 78% to 94%, and Carlos Ramirez-Rosa (Ward 35) moved up from 76% support for Emanuel to 84% for Lightfoot.

Conversely, aldermen who identified as “centrist” “moderate” “independent” or “conservative,” such as Anthony Beale (Ward 9), 13th Ward Marty Quinn (Ward 13), Raymond Lopez (Ward 15), Nicholas Sposato (Ward 38), and Anthony Napolitano (Ward 41), decreased their level of agreement with the mayor after the transition.

The Progressive Reform Caucus

The Progressive Reform Caucus was first established in 2013 during Mayor Emanuel's first term. During Emanuel's last two years in office, the Caucus had 12 members, but it grew to 18 members in the new Council that was sworn in with Mayor Lightfoot.

As can be seen in Tables 5 & 6, the increase in the number of members of the Progressive Reform Caucus only slightly increased the Caucus' level for support of the Mayor.

During Mayor Emanuel's last two years, the Progressive Reform Caucus had a mean average agreement of 82% with the mayor. After the election of 2019, the larger Progressive Reform Caucus only increased to a mean agreement of 88% with Mayor Lightfoot.

Also, five of the six Progressive Reform Caucus members who have the lowest agreement with Mayor Lightfoot, Daniel La Spata (Ward 1), Carlos Ramirez-Rosa (Ward 33), Byron Sigcho-Lopez (Ward 25), Rossana Rodriguez-Sanchez (Ward 33), and Jeanette Taylor (Ward 20), all identified as socialists. They explained that when they voted against the Mayor Lightfoot, it was because they believed her legislation had not been progressive enough.

A voice vote eclipses a divided roll call vote

The single most important set of votes which established the committee, committee chairpersons, and the rules governing the council were taken at the first organizing meeting of the city council on May 21, 2019. The votes were divisive and several historically powerful aldermen, such as Alderman Ed Burke (Ward 14), were excluded from the council's leadership. But since the vote was a voice vote and not a roll call vote the actual divisions of the votes were unclear. But what is clear, is these votes gave the mayor considerable control over the later actions of the council.

Among the other contentious city council votes during the Lightfoot administration are the following decisions.

Lightfoot defeats an effort to delay marijuana sales

On December 18, 2019, the city council's Aldermanic Black Caucus made a second attempt to delay the sale of recreational marijuana by six months to obtain more licensed African American vendors. The day before a full city council vote, the ordinance calling for the delay passed committee by a 10 to 9 vote and some aldermen told the news media that the delay was expected to pass the full council.

Mayor Lightfoot was strongly opposed to any further delay. She warned the aldermen about "multitude of "unintended consequences," of any delay, including the loss of critical tax revenue needed to balance the city budget.¹

To prevent passage of the delay ordinance, Mayor Lightfoot teamed up with Governor J. B. Pritzker to lobby aldermen. To win over aldermen, Pritzker or members of his administration, gave assurances that a couple of new medical marijuana licenses would be allotted to "social equity applicants."

When the votes were tallied, Lightfoot and Pritzker were winners. The delay ordinance failed by a 19-29 vote. Many members of the Aldermanic Black Caucus voted for the ordinance, but five broke away from the caucus position. Following this key vote, the city council meeting erupted in a rapid series of votes involving procedures. Chicago Sun-Times journalist Fran Spielman commented that it was the most contentious back-and-forth between council members and the mayor since the Council Wars during Mayor Washington reign.²

Budget battles

At the time of Mayor Lightfoot's election in April 2019, it was widely known that the city was facing a budget shortfall of about $1 billion. In Mayor Lightfoot's "State of the City Speech," on August 29, 2019, she laid out plan for solving the city's financial crisis. She vowed that in the short term, she would aggressively cut fraud, waste, and corruption. For the long term, Lightfoot planned to develop an urban growth strategy that shifted investments from the central business districts to the neighborhoods.³

On October 23, 2019, Mayor Lightfoot presented a $11.5 billion city budget for 2020, which was designed to close the deficit without significantly raising property taxes. However, in her first budget, she did propose new taxes on ridesharing in the central business district, new parking meters in the West Loop, doubling the city's tax on food and drinks, and creating a graduated real estate transfer tax. Her proposed budget also anticipated new revenue resulting from the State further legalizing some vices. She said that with legislative approval, Chicago would open a new casino and would allow the sale of recreational marijuana. She also proposed declaring a $300 million TIF surplus the largest in Chicago's history, with the bulk of the surplus for Chicago Public Schools, and about $31 million for the City's general fund.⁴

The 2020 budget approved by the city council on November 26, 2019 did not differ dramatically from the one the mayor proposed. The budget was approved by passing three ordinances: the 2020 Annual Appropriation Ordinance, which passed by a vote of 39 to 11; the Property Tax levy by a vote of 35-15; and number of amendments to the Municipal code covering various business fees and taxes, which was approved by a similar vote of 39 to 11.

Property taxes were raised a modest by $65 million to pay off bonds previously approved by the city council and keep local library branches open seven days a week.⁵ While spending remained frugal, Mayor Lightfoot's budget did include additional spending on homelessness, community-based outreach workers, and improving the city's mental health infrastructure.

The opposition to Mayor Lightfoot's first budget came from two political factions. The most significant was from progressive aldermen-- particularly the city's six socialist members-- who expressed frustration that the budget did not go far enough to provide services.

On the council floor, the socialist Alderman Byron Sigcho-Lopez (Ward 25), criticized Mayor Lightfoot for "underfunding social services, overfunding police and breaking her campaign promise to re-open shuttered mental health clinics." He added that the budget created no new revenue streams and relied on too many one-time funding sources instead of addressing Chicago's fiscal problems more systemically.⁶

Additionally, the socialists argued that the minimum wage increase attached to the budget proposals was inadequate. Alderman Carlos Ramirez-Rosa (Ward 35) fought to raise the city's subminimum wage for tipped workers so that their wages equaled that of all other minimum wage workers. Mayor Lightfoot opposed the idea. In the end, Chicago's minimum wage was increased from its original $13 per hour to $15 per hour by July 2021, while the subminimum wage was raised from $6.40 to $8.40 per in that same period.

The socialists were joined in their opposition to the budget by three freshmen progressive aldermen: Mike Rodriguez (Ward 22), Matt Martin (Ward 37), and Maria Hadden (Ward 49). They agreed that more funding should be allocated to provide services to Chicago's poor and working-class residents.

Additional opposition to the proposed budget were "No" votes were from Aldermen Anthony Beale (Ward 9) and Alderman Raymond Lopez (Ward 15) These two aldermen have the lowest levels of support for Lightfoot's legislation, 62% and 34% respectively so their joining in voting against the mayor's budget is consistent with their overall opposition. They frequently voted against Mayor's appointments and against court settlements, two matters that aldermen typically approve in deference to the Mayor and her administration.

A year later, on October 21st, 2020, Mayor Lightfoot proposed her second $12.8 billion budget for 2021. This budget avoided massive layoffs among the city's 36,000 employees and left most city programs unaffected. but it did include layoffs for 350 nonunion employees and the elimination over 1,000 open positions. It also included debt refinancing, to save $500 million in interest. Moreover, it increased property taxes, and—contrary to Lightfoot's campaign statements —raised fines and fees on some Chicagoans.⁷

The most controversial aspect of the budget was an increase in property taxes even though the proposed increase was small. Still, the fact that the increase was tied to the annual consumer price index meant that property taxes would automatically go up every year in the future. The budget also called for raising the gasoline tax by $0.03 per gallon, and automatically ticketing residents caught on speed cameras driving 6 mph over the speed limit.⁸

Lightfoot's 2021 budget passed on November 24, 2020, by a vote of 28-22, but opposition to it was more intense than to her first budget. It passed only four votes to spare.

The opposition to Lightfoot's first budget had been led by the progressives, particularly the council's six socialist members. This time progressives were divided on the budget, while conservatives were mostly opposed. Traditional conservative aldermen, such as Anthony Napolitano (Ward 41) and James Gardiner (Ward 45) were opposed, but they were joined by socially liberal but economically conservative aldermen such as Brennan Reilly (Ward 42) and Thomas Tunney (Ward 44). Additionally, five aldermen that are associated with the Chicago machine—Patrick Daley Thompson (Ward 11), Marty Quinn (Ward 13), Ed Burke (Ward 14), Raymond Lopez (Ward 15), and Anthony Beale (Ward 9)—all voted against it.

Both the council's left and right wings found aspects of the budget with which they were dissatisfied. The conservatives opposed the tax increases, and the fact that the mayor did not plan to fill vacant positions, many in the police department. Progressives opposed the budget because the increases in taxes, fees, and fines were seen as regressive, and because the budget did not include significant cuts to the police department.

Despite the close vote, Lightfoot considered the budget's passage a major victory. She reportedly celebrated with scotch, a cigar, and a steak.⁹

The mayor's celebration would not last long. A few months later, on February 26, 2021, Mayor Lightfoot faced opposition once again when she asked the council to authorize the spending of $377 million in federal COVID19 relief funds. What was considered a routine vote became a political skirmish when Aldermen Burke (Ward 14) and Lopez (Ward 15) used a parliamentary maneuver to delay the vote. The delay effort was defeated 16-31. The vote to approve the stimulus spending then passed 37-10.¹⁰ The 10 aldermen who voted against the mayor's stimulus spending plan included a mixture of conservatives and progressives.

Emergency Powers

Mayor Lightfoot's battles with some alderman over her use of power during the Covid-19 pandemic began in the Spring of 2020, when the governments were beginning to respond to rising infections, hospitalizations, and deaths in their cities and states.

On April 22, 2020, Mayor Lightfoot and the city council convened the first “virtual meeting” in Chicago’s 170-year history. However, the meeting was cut short. An unlikely alliance formed between Aldermen Raymond Lopez (Ward 14) and Carlos Ramirez Rosa (35). The two attempted to block an ordinance that would grant Mayor Lightfoot emergency powers during the Covid-19 crisis. Despite differing political persuasions—one a moderate often aligned with aldermen associated with the Chicago machine, the other, a socialist—both aldermen called the ordinance a “power grab” by the mayor.

On April 22, when an emergency powers ordinance was introduced, Alderman Lopez moved to defer and publish, thus delaying the vote. Then Lopez made a motion to postpone the meeting that failed by a vote of 15 -35. After several aldermen objected, the Mayor gaveled the meeting closed and scheduled a meeting two days later.

On April 24th, emergency powers were granted by the unusually close vote of 29-21. This reminded some observers of the many 29-21 votes by which Aldermen Burke and Vrydoyak had blocked the late Mayor Harold Washington’s agenda in the 1980s.

However, there was a large difference. Mayor Washington was thwarted for most of his first term. This time the mayor won. Mayor Lightfoot, with support from Center-Liberal bloc, was granted emergency powers. During the debate, Alderman Signcho-Lopez (Ward 25), who opposed the granting of emergency powers, argued that “We cannot go back to the time we had one mayor overseeing everything and a rubber stamp” city council.¹¹ On the winning side, Alderman Brendan Reilly (Ward 42), said the mayor made key concessions by limiting the scope of the powers and setting a June 30th end date. He concluded, “I ultimately have faith in Mayor Lightfoot to be judicious with these powers we’re giving her.”¹²

Although the socialists and progressives lost the struggle over the Mayor's powers, many protections for workers and tenants that they championed were passed during the pandemic. At the following meeting on May 20, 2020, the City Council passed its “Fair Workweek Ordinance” on a vote of 44-5. This ordinance required employers to provide workers with written notice of their work schedules.

Housing and Development

At the city council meeting on June 17, 2020, a majority passed an ordinance, by a vote of 37-12, protecting tenants from eviction if they had experienced financial hardships caused by the pandemic. Opposition to the ordinance had no ideological consistency. Alderman Reilly (Ward 42) opposed the measure, and he was supported by Aldermen Emma Mitts (Ward 37) and Michael Scott Jr. (Ward 24). Mitts’ and Scott’s opposition was surprising because they are supporters of Mayor Lightfoot and rarely vote against her. Meanwhile fiscal conservatives and aldermen who traditionally opposed Lightfoot—except for Lopez—all voted for the ordinance.

Alliances shifted again in the next meeting on July 22, 2020, when the Chicago City Council passed a “Fair Notice” ordinance by a vote of 35-14. The ordinance permanently required landlords to notify tenants 60 days in advance of raising rent or not renewing a lease.

In the spring of 2021, the Chicago City Council passed a series of ordinances to promote redevelopment and increase the city’s affordable housing stock. Then on March 24, 2021, the Chicago City Council passed, by a vote of 37-12, an ordinance that required developers to pay a fee up to $15,000 for demolishing homes in areas where rents were rapidly increasing.

At the same meeting, the council acted on a Fulton Market redevelopment. Mayor Lightfoot favored changes to the zoning regulations in the Near West Side Planned Manufacturing District to allow for the construction of up to 665 new residential units, 30% of which would be designated affordable, and investments would be made in pedestrian-friendly amenities.¹³ Despite acknowledging the need for more affordable housing, many progressives—including the city council’s six socialists—voted against the rezoning plan out of concern that it was too generous to developers and would encourage gentrification.

At the following meeting on April 21, 2020, the city council passed Lightfoot's plan to require developers seeking zoning changes in gentrifying neighborhoods to increase the percentage of affordable units in their new buildings from 10% to 20%.¹⁴ The vote was 42-8. The opposition to the plan consisted of Council's conservatives and three of the Council's six socialists. The socialist argued the plan could have been even more ambitious.¹⁵

Conclusion

On April 2, 2021, almost two-years since winning her runoff election against Cook County President Toni Preckwinkle, Mayor Lori Lightfoot sent an email to her supporters listing what she considered to be the major accomplishments of her administration, including:

- strengthening the city’s “Welcoming City” Ordinance,
- raising the minimum wage to $15 an hour,
- passing a fair scheduling ordinance,
- reforming fines and fees and ending water shut-offs,
- battling COVID19,
- ending aldermanic prerogative,
- strengthening the work of the Inspector General, and
- creating INVEST South/West to provide $750 million to distressed neighborhoods on Chicago’s South and West sides.

Nearly all these accomplishments required consent from the Chicago City Council. Many of the votes which made them possible were contentious and the outcome of each vote was not always predictable, especially when compared to the debating and voting on legislation that occurred in most city council meeting since the mid-1950s.

But by the standards of many state and local governments and in the U.S. House and Senate, such robust give and take is considered a desired feature of a democracy. In Chicago, however, they have been a rarity.

No matter how you describe it, Mayor Lightfoot's accomplishments illustrate the Chicago City Council's new political dynamics. For over a century, Chicago's political bosses have used their dictatorial political power to dominate the city council.

Now, at the beginning of the twenty-first century, this appears to be changing. Today, the new city council is more diverse, its aldermen more independent, and with many aldermen committed to governing effectively.

Mayor Lightfoot, backed by high voter approval, is not above using her considerable power. Nor is she afraid of sharply confronting her opposition. But she is not a "boss." She has been able to deal successfully with a new kind of city council. Mayor Lightfoot's looks like she will be able to advance her liberal-progressive agenda. But she will need to incorporate input and make compromises with aldermen who have their own political agendas.
